PREFACE.

The text of this edition of King Henry the Fifth is essentially that of the first folio (see p. 10) collated with the quartos and the leading modern editions. For the readings of the quartos I have depended mainly on the Cambridge edition and the reprints of the New Shakespere Society.

The notes, when not original, are as a rule credited to the sources whence they are derived. It has been my aim, as in the earlier volumes of the series, to give in concise form all the comments of former editors that seemed of any real value or interest; in other words, to prepare what may be called a popular "Variorum" edition for the general reader and student, as distinguished from an exhaustive work for the critic and the advanced scholar such as my friend Furness is elaborating. I have kept in mind the fact that few persons, not excepting teachers in our high schools and academies, have ready access to a complete Shakespearian library; and that few except teachers would often avail themselves of such a library if it were open to them. In schools, moreover, it is simply impossible for all the members of a large class to make systematic use of the limited number of books of reference in the library. Each pupil really needs all of them all the time he is preparing his lesson, but there are perhaps twenty or thirty others who want them at the same time. I have endeavoured to render the student comparatively independent of books of reference. With the "Globe" Shakespeare—the cheapest and most convenient of the "complete" editions—and Abbott's "Shakespearian Grammar"—which no student can afford to do without—he is fully equipped for his work. The former book enables him to look up all the quoted passages in which Shakespeare is allowed to be his own commentator, and the latter explains and illustrates the pecul-ärities of the poet's English; the notes furnish everything else that is needed in the ordinary study of the text. So far as I am aware, no other edition gives frequent references to Abbott, and no other gives with equal fulness the "various readings" and critical comments on controverted passages. Indeed, no other edition known to me (with the single exception of Furness's) contains so large and varied a body of notes. Most of these are condensed to the utmost, but I have found room for a long note whenever it was necessary for the thorough elucidation of the text.

I am here only stating what my plan has been, and how I have tried to carry it out, without presuming to claim that the plan is the best possible or the execution faultless. While I am grateful for the favour with which the little books have thus far been received, I shall be even more grateful for any friendly hint that may help me to make them better.

Cambridge, Oct. 15, 1877.

NOTE.—In my references to other plays of Shakespeare, the numbers of the lines are invariably those of the "Globe" edition; as in Abbott's Grammar, Schmidt's Lexicon, etc. In the case of scenes entirely or partly in prose, these numbers may not correspond with those of my edition, on account of the differences in type and length of line.

The references to Halliwell are to his great folio edition, kindly loaned me by my friend, Dr. J. R. Nichols. Those to Collier, Dyce, and Knight are to their second editions; those to Hudson are to his first edition.

THE CRONICLE History of Henry the fift, With his battell fought at Agin Court in France. Together with Auntient Pistoll. As it hath bene sundry times played by the Right honorable the Lord Chamberlain his servants. LONDON Printed by Thomas Creede, for Tho. Millington, and Iohn Busby. And are to be sold at his house in Carter Lane, next the Powle head. 1600.

This edition appears to have been hastily gotten up, and was probably compiled from short-hand notes taken at the theatre.

It was reprinted in 1602 "by Thomas Creede, for Thomas Pauier," and "sold at his shop in Cornhill, at the signe of the Cat and Parrets, neare the Exchange," and again in 1608, "Printed for T. P."

The folio must be considered the only authority for the text, though the quartos are occasionally of service in the correction of typographical errors.

The date of the play is fixed by a passage in the Chorus of the last act:

"Were now the general of our gracious empress—
As in good time he may—from Ireland coming," etc.

This evidently refers to Lord Essex, who went to Ireland, April 15, 1599, and returned to London, September 28, of the same year. Unless the passage was a later insertion, which is not probable, the play must have been written between those dates. It is not mentioned by Meres in 1598 in the list which includes Richard II., Richard III., Henry IV., and King John.*

II. THE HISTORICAL SOURCES OF THE PLAY.

Shakespeare took the leading incidents of his Henry IV. and Henry V. from an anonymous play entitled "The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth," which was written at least as early as 1588,* and had a popularity far beyond its merits; but he drew his historical materials mainly from Holinshed’s “Chronicles of Englande, Scotlannde, and Ireland,” as the illustrative extracts from that author in our notes will show. As in the case of Richard II. (see our ed. of that play, p. 14), he doubtless used the second edition of Holinshed, published in 1586–87.

III. CRITICAL COMMENTS ON THE PLAY.

[From Gervinus’s “Shakespeare Commentaries.”†]

The whole interest of our play lies in the development of the ethical character of the hero. After the poet has delineated his careless youthful life in 1 Henry IV., and in 2 Henry IV. has shown the sting of reflection and consideration piercing his soul as the period of self-dependence approaches, he now displays Henry as arrived at the post of his vocation, and exhibits the king acting up to his resolutions for the future. At the very beginning of the play we are at once informed of the utter change which has passed over him. The sinful nature is driven out of him by reflection, the current of reformation has suddenly scoured away the old faults; as the wholesome strawberry ripens best “neighboured by fruit of baser quality,” so his active practice, his intercourse with lower life and simple nature, has matured in him all those gifts which etiquette and court ceremony would never

* It was entered on the Registers of the Stationers’ Company, May 14, 1594, to Thomas Creede, as “a booke intituled the Famous Victories of Henrye the Fyft, conteyninge the honorable battell of Agincourt,” but it is known that the famous actor Tarlton, who died in 1588, took the part of the Clown in the play. The earliest printed edition that has come down to us bears date in 1598, and has the following title-page:

THE | FAMOUS VIC-|tories of Henry the | fifth : | Containing the Honou-|rable Battell of Agin-cour|t: | As it was plaide by the Queenes | Majesties | Players. | LONDON | Printed by Thomas Creede, 1598.

have produced in him, and which those now around him perceive in him with admiration. The poet expressly tells us, through the prelates who discuss the king in the first scene, that there are no miracles, either in his poetry or in the world, and that the natural grounds for this wonderful change are to be sought for really in the unpromising school of this apparently untutored man. There this many-sidedness was developed which now astonishes them in him, and on account of which he now appears equally acquainted with all things, ecclesiastical and secular, in the cabinet as in the field. He no longer squanders his now valuable time, but weighs it to the last grain; the curb of mildness and mercy is now placed on his passions, and even foreign lands conjecture that

"his vanities forespent
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly." . . .

In his courtship and on the day of battle Henry is just as plain a king as if he had "sold his farm to buy his crown." He has shaken off his old dissolute companions, but the remembrances of that simple intercourse are recalled to our mind at every moment. The same inclination to rove about with the common man in his army, the old mildness and familiarity, and the same love for an innocent jest, exist in him now as then, without derogating in the least from his kingly dignity. He leaves his nobles waiting in his tent while he visits the posts of his soldiers; the old habit of night-watching is of use to him now; he sounds the disposition of individuals; he encourages them without high-sounding words; he fortifies them without ostentation; he can preach to them and solve moral scruples, and can make himself intelligible to them; he contrives a trick quite of the old kind in the moment of most gloomy suspense; like a brother, he borrows the cloak of the old Erpingham; he familiarly allows his countryman Fluellen to join freely in his conversation with the herald; and in his short appeal before the battle he declares all to be his brothers who on this Crispin's day shed their blood with him.

This contrast between his repose and calmness and his martial excitement, between his plain homely nature and the kingly heroic spirit which in the moment of action exercises dominion over him, is, however, not the only one in which the poet has exhibited him. The night before and the day during the battle, which form the centre of our play, is a period so prominent, and one in which such manifold moods, emotions, and passions, are roused and crossed, that the best opportunity was here afforded to the poet for exhibiting to our view this many-sided man in all the richness and the diversity of his nature. When the mind is quickened, he himself says, "the organs break up their drowsy grave, and newly move with casted slough and fresh legerity;" and thus is it with him in this great and decisive moment. We see him in a short time alternate between the most different emotions and positions, ever the same master over himself, or we may rather say, over the opportunity and the matter which lie for the moment before him. . . .

How popular after his old fashion, and at the same time how sublime, is his encouragement to the battle! How calm his last words to the French herald! How far is he from being over-hasty in giving credit to the victory! When he hears of the touching death of the noble York, how near is he to tears! and at the same moment, alarmed by a new tumult, how steeled to a bloody command! how impatiently furious at the last resistance! and at the moment when victory decides for him, how pious and how humble! And again, a short time after this solemn elevation of mind, he concludes his joke with Williams, careful even then that no harm should result from it. The poet has continued in the fifth act to show us to the very last the many-sided nature of the king. The terrible warrior is transformed into the merry bridegroom, the humorous vein again rises within him; yet he is not so much in love with his happiness, or so happy in his love, that in the midst of his wooing, and with all his jest and repartee, he would relax the smallest article of the peace which his policy had designed.

Throughout the whole play, throughout the whole bearing of the king, sounds the key-note of a religious composure, of a severe conscientiousness, and of a humble modesty. The Chronicle, which extols Henry so highly that it placed him before the poet as an historical favourite, praises the king's piety at home and at every page in his campaign; Shakespeare accepted this historical hint in no mechanical manner, but wrought it appropriately into the characteristics of his hero. The clergy, at the very beginning of the play, call him a true friend of the Church, and have reason to rejoice over his respect for it, as well as over his knowledge of sacred things. When he is occupied with the plan of war, he charges the Archbishop of Canterbury with a solemn oath to take heed in his counsel; he "will believe in heart" that what he speaks as to his right to this war is in his "conscience washed as pure as sin with baptism." When he has no thought but France, those to God alone "run before" his business. He receives it as a promising ordinance from God that the treason lurking in his way is "brought to light." He delivers his "puissance into the hand of God, putting it straight in expedition;" "God before," he says several times, he will come to take his right. He orders his old friend Bardolph to be pitilessly executed for robbing a church; he wishes all such offenders to be cut off; for he well knows that when "lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner." We have seen him previous to the battle in solemn preparation, and engaged in edifying conversation with his soldiers. His first word on the certainty of the victory is, "Praised be God, and not our strength, for it!" When he reviews the greatness of the victory, he says again, "Take it, God, for it is only thine!" And that this is in earnest, he orders even death to be proclaimed to any who may boast of it or take the honour from God. At his triumphal entry into London, he forbids the sword and helm, the trophies of his warlike deeds, to be borne before him; and the poet says expressly of him, in the prologue, what once the prince had said of himself on that day at Shrewsbury over Percy's body—that he was "free from vanity and self-glorious pride, giving full trophy, signal, and ostent, quite from himself to God." The atonement which his father could not attain to, for want of energetic, persevering, inward stimulus, is accomplished by him. In his prayer to God before the battle, when he wishes that "the sense of reckoning" may be taken from his soldiers, and that his father's fault may not be thought upon, he declares that he has "interred anew" Richard's body, has wept over it, and has ordered masses to be said; that he has five hundred poor in yearly pay "who twice a day their withered hands hold up toward Heaven" for him. The poet, we see plainly, adheres to the character of the age, and invests Henry with all that outward work of repentance which in that day was considered necessary for the expiation of a crime. To many he will appear to have gone too far in this, both as regards his hero, who is otherwise of so unshackled a mind, and himself, rising as he does generally so far above the narrow views of his own, to say nothing of older times. But above this objection, also, the poet soars victoriously in those excellent words which he puts into the mouth of the king at the close of that penitential prayer:

"More will I do;
Though all that I can do is little worth,
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon."
[From Dowden's "Shakspere."*]

Henry's freedom from egoism, his modesty, his integrity, his joyous humour, his practical piety, his habit of judging things by natural and not artificial standards—all these are various developments of the central element of his character, his noble realization of fact.

But his realization of fact produces something more than this integrity, this homely honesty of nature. It breathes through him an enthusiasm which would be intense if it were not so massive. Through his union with the vital strength of the world, he becomes one of the world's most glorious and beneficent forces. From the plain and mirth-creating comrade of his fellow-soldiers he rises into the genius of impassioned battle. From the modest and quiet adviser with his counsellors and prelates, he is transformed, when the occasion requires it, into the terrible administrator of justice. When Henry takes from his father's pillow the crown, and places it upon his own head, the deed is done with no fluttering rapture of attainment. He has entered gravely upon his manhood. He has made very real to himself the long, careful, and joyless life of his father who had won for him this "golden care." His heart is full of tenderness for this sad father, to whom he had been able to bring so little happiness. But now he takes his due, the crown, and the world's whole force shall not wrest it from him:

"Thy due from me
Is tears, and heavy sorrows of the blood,
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:
My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy praise and blood,
Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,

INTRODUCTION.

Which God shall guard; and put the world’s whole strength
Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lineal honour from me.”

Here is no æsthetic feeling for the “situation,” only the profoundest and noblest entrance into the fact. . . .

Shortly before the English army sets sail for France, the treason of Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey is disclosed to the king. He does not betray his acquaintance with their designs. Surrounded by traitors, he boldly enters his council-chamber at Southampton (the wind is sitting fair, and but one deed remains to do before they go aboard). On the preceding day a man was arrested who had railed against the person of the king. Henry gives orders that he be set at liberty:

“We consider
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And on his more advice we pardon him.”

But Scroop and Grey and Cambridge interpose. It would be true mercy, they insist, to punish such an offender. And then, when they have unawares brought themselves within the range of justice, Henry unfolds their guilt. The wrath of Henry has in it some of that awfulness and terror suggested by the apocalyptic reference to “the wrath of the Lamb.” It is the more terrible because it transcends all egoistic feeling. What fills the king with indignation is not so much that his life should have been conspired against by men on whom his bounty has been bestowed without measure, as that they should have revolted against the loyalty of man, weakened the bonds of fellowship, and lowered the high tradition of humanity:

“O, how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutifull?
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet,
Free from gross passion or of mirth or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such and so finely bolted didst thou seem:
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fraught man and best indured
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee:
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man."

No wonder that the terrible moral insistance of these words can subdue consciences made of penetrable stuff; no wonder that such an awful discovery of high realities of life should call forth the loyalty that lurked within a traitor's heart. But though tears escape Henry he cannot relent:

"Touching our person seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death;
The taste whereof, God of his mercy give
You patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences!"

And having vindicated the justice of God, and purged his country of treason, Henry sets his face to France with the light of splendid achievement in his eyes.

On the night before the great battle, Henry moves among his soldiers, and passes disguised from sentinel to sentinel.
He is not, like his father, exhausted and outworn by the careful construction of a life. If an hour of depression comes upon him, he yet is strong, because he can look through his depression to a strength and virtue outside of and beyond himself. Joy may ebb within him or rise, as it will; the current of his inmost being is fed by a source that springs from the hard rock of life, and is no tidal flow. He accepts his weakness and his weariness as part of the surrender of ease and strength and self which he makes on behalf of England. With a touch of his old love of frolic he enters on the quarrel with Williams, and exchanges gages with the soldier. When morning dawns he looks freshily, and “overbears attaint,” with cheerful semblance and sweet majesty:
INTRODUCTION.

“A largess universal like the sun
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear.”

With a prayer to God he sets to rights the heavenward side of his nature, and there leaves it. In the battle Henry does not, in the manner of his politic father, send into the field a number of counterfeit kings to attract away from himself the centre of the war. There is no stratagem at Agincourt; it is “plain shock and even play of battle.” If Henry for a moment ceases to be the skilful wielder of resolute strength, it is only when he rises into the genius of the rage of battle:

“I was not angry since I came to France
Until this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald;
Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill:
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field; they do offend our sight.
If they ’ll do neither, we will come to them,
And make them skirr away as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings.
Besides, we ’ll cut the throats of those we have,
And not a man of them that we shall take Shall taste our mercy.”

It is in harmony with the spirit of the play, and with the character of Henry, that it should close with no ostentatious heroics, but with the half jocular, whole earnest wooing of the French princess by the English king.

Chorus. O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention,
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
KING HENRY THE FIFTH.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentle all,
The flat unraised spirit that hath dar'd
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O the very casques
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a million;
And let us, ciphers to this great accompt,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
Whose high-upreared and abutting fronts
The perilous, narrow ocean parts asunder.
Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance:
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth;
For 't is your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there, jumping o'er times,
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass: for the which supply,
Admit me Chorus to this history;
Who prologue-like your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

ACT I.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Ely.

Canterbury. My lord, I'll tell you; that self bill is urg'd,
Which in the eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scrambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

Canterbury. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
We lose the better half of our possession;
For all the temporal lands which men devout
By testament have given to the church
Would they strip from us; being valued thus:
As much as would maintain, to the king's honour.
Full fifteen earls and fifteen hundred knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And, to relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year: thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Canterbury. 'T would drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Canterbury. The king is full of grace and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Canterbury. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very moment
Consideration, like an angel, came
And whipp’d the offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a paradise
To envelope and contain celestial spirits.
Never was such a sudden scholar made;
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady currance, scouring faults;
Nor never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat and all at once
As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Canterbury. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate:
Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You would say it hath been all in all his study:
List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render’d you in music:
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter: that, when he speaks,
The air, a charter’d libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men’s ears,
To steal his sweet and honey’d sentences;
So that the art and practic part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoretic:
Which is a wonder how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain,
His companies unletter’d, rude, and shallow,
His hours fill’d up with riots, banquets, sports,
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best Neighbour’d by fruit of baser quality:
ACT I. SCENE I.

And so the prince obscur'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet crescive in his faculty.

Canterbury. It must be so; for miracles are ceas'd,
And therefore we must needs admit the means
How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

Canterbury. He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part
Than cherishing the exhibitors against us;
For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
Upon our spiritual convocation
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France,—to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my lord?

Canterbury. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save that there was not time enough to hear,
As I perceiv'd his grace would fain have done,
The severals and unhidden passages
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms,
And generally to the crown and seat of France
Deriv'd from Edward, his great-grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off?

Canterbury. The French ambassador upon that instant
Crav'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come
To give him hearing: is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Canterbury. Then go we in, to know his embassy;
Which I could with a ready guess declare,
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

_Ely._ I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear it.  [Exeunt.

Scene II. The same. The Presence-chamber.

_Enter King Henry, Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and Attendants._

King Henry. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

Exeter. Not here in presence.

King Henry. Send for him, good uncle.

Westmoreland. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?

King Henry. Not yet, my cousin: we would be resolv'd, Before we hear him, of some things of weight
That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

_Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Ely._

Canterbury. God and his angels guard your sacred throne,
And make you long become it!

King Henry. Sure, we thank you.

My learned lord, we pray you to proceed
And justly and religiously unfold
Why the law Salique that they have in France
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth:
For God doth know how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.

Therefore take heed how you impawn our person, How you awake our sleeping sword of war.
We charge you, in the name of God, take heed;
For never two such kingdoms did contend
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint
'Gainst him whose wrong gives edge unto the swords
That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjuration speak, my lord;
For we will hear, note, and believe in heart
That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd
As pure as sin with baptism.

Canterbury. Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you peers,
That owe yourselves, your lives, and services
To this imperial throne. There is no bar
To make against your highness' claim to France
But this, which they produce from Pharamond,—
'In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant:'
'No woman shall succeed in Salique land,'
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this law and female bar.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm
That the land Salique is in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe;
Where Charles the Great, having subdued the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd then this law; to wit, no female
Should be inheritrix in Salique land:
Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany call'd Meisen.
Then doth it well appear the Salique law
Was not devised for the realm of France:
Nor did the French possess the Salique land.
KING HENRY V.
KING HENRY THE FIFTH.

So hath your highness; never king of England
Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects,
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England
And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Canterbury. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood and sword and fire to win your right;
In aid whereof we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

King Henry. We must not only arm to invade the French,
But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Canterbury. They of those marches, gracious sovereign, Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

King Henry. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For you shall read that my great-grandfather
Never went with his forces into France
But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fulness of his force,
Galling the gleaned land with hot assays,
Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;

That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Canterbury. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege;

For hear her but exampled by herself:
When all her chivalry hath been in France,

And she a mourning widow of her nobles,

She hath herself not only well defended,
ACT I. SCENE II.

But taken and impounded as a stray
The King of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
And make her chronicle as rich with praise
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea
With sunken wrack and sunless treasuries.

Westmoreland. But there's a saying very old and true,
'If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin.'

For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs,
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

Exeter. It follows then the cat must stay at home:
Yet that is but a curst necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home;
For government, though high and low and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Canterbury. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience: for so work the honey-bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king and officers of sorts;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings.
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds,
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor;
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey,
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously:
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Come to one mark, as many ways meet in one town,
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea,
As many lines close in the dial's centre;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege.
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried, and our nation lose
The name of hardiness and policy.

King Henry. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.
[Exeunt some Attendants.]

Now are we well resolv'd; and, by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we 'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces: or there we 'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery
O'er France and all her almost kingly dukedoms, ACT I. SCENE II.

Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.
Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for we hear
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.

First Ambassador. May 't please your majesty to give us leave Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off
The Dauphin's meaning and our embassy?

King Henry. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king;
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons:
Therefore with frank and with uncurbed plainness
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

First Ambassador. Thus then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says that you savour too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd there's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit,
This tun of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Desires you let the dukedoms that you claim
Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

King Henry. What treasure, uncle?
Exeter. Tennis-balls, my liege.

King Henry. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us;
His present and your pains we thank you for.
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chases. And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valued this poor seat of England,
And therefore, living hence, did give ourself
To barbarous license; as 't is ever common
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin I will keep my state,
Be like a king, and show my sail of greatness
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty
And plodded like a man for working-days,
But I will rise there with so full a glory
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands,
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet ungotten and unborn
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name
Tell you the Dauphin I am coming on,
ACT I. SCENE II.

To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well-hallow'd cause.
So get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin
His jest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep more than did laugh at it.—
Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.

Exeter. This was a merry message.

King Henry. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour
That may give furtherance to our expedition;
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
We 'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore let every man now task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt. Flourish.]
ACT II.
PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chorus. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies:
Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man.
They sell the pasture now to buy the horse,
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercuries;
For now sits Expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilts unto the point
With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers.
The French, advis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear, and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men,
One, Richard Earl of Cambridge, and the second,
Henry Lord Scroop of Masham, and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland,
Have, for the gilt of France,—O guilt indeed!—
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on, and well digest
The abuse of distance; force a play.
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene
Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton;
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit:
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We 'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.

[Exit.

Scene I. London. A Street.

Enter Corporal Nym and Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bardolph. Well met, Corporal Nym.
Nym. Good morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.
Bardolph. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yet?
Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles; but that shall be as it may.
I dare not fight; but I will wink and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's an end.

Bardolph. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we 'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good Corporal Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may:
that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bardolph. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and certainly she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod.
There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Hostess.

Bardolph. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife: good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host Pistol!
ACT II. SCENE I.

Pistol. Base tike, call'st thou me host?
Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Hostess. No, by my troth, not long; for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy house straight. [Nym and Pistol draw.] O well a day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! we shall see wilful adultery and murder committed.

Bardolph. Good lieutenant! good corporal! offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!

Pistol. Pish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-ear'd cur of Iceland!

Hostess. Good Corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

Pistol. 'Solus,' egregious dog? O viper vile!
The 'solus' in thy most mervailous face;
The 'solus' in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy,
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retort the 'solus' in thy bowels;
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason; you cannot conjure me. I have an humour to knock you indifferently well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may: and that 's the humour of it.

Pistol. O braggart vile, and damned furious wight!
The grave doth gape, and doting death is near;
Therefore exhale.

Bardolph. Hear me, hear me what I say: he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier. [Draws.

_Pistol_. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate.
Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give;
Thy spirits are most tall.

_Nym._ I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms;
that is the humour of it.

_Pistol._ 'Couple a gorge!'
That is the word. I thee defy again.
_O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?_ 70
_No_; to the spital go,
And from the powdering-tub of infamy
Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind,
_Doll Tersheet_ she by name, and her espouse:
I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly
For the only she; and—pauca, there's enough.
Go to.

_Enter the Boy._

_Boy._ Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and you, hostess; he is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolphe, put thy face between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan. Faith, he's very ill. 81

_Bardolphe._ Away, you rogue!

_Hostess._ By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days. The king has killed his heart. Good husband, come home presently. [Exeunt Hostess and Boy.

_Bardolph._ Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

_Pistol._ Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food howl on!

_Nym._ You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

_Pistol._ Base is the slave that pays.

_Nym._ That now I will have: that's the humour of it.
ACT II. SCENE I.

Pistol. As manhood shall compound: push home. [They draw.

Bardolph. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pistol. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bardolph. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends; an thou wilt not, why, then, be enemies with me too. Prithee, put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pistol. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay;
And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:
I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me.
Is not this just? for I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?

Pistol. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well, then, that 's the humour of 't.

Re-enter Hostess.

Hostess. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shaked of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold.
Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight;
that 's the even of it.

Pistol. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;

His heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king; but it must be as it may:
he passes some humours and careers.

Pistol. Let us condole the knight; for lambkins we will live.
Scene II. Southampton. A Council-chamber.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.

Bedford. Fore God, his grace is bold, to trust these traitors.

Exeter. They shall be apprehended by and by.

Westmoreland. How smooth and even they do bear themselves!

As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,
Crowned with faith and constant loyalty.

Bedford. The king hath note of all that they intend,
By interception which they dream not of.

Exeter. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath dull’d and cloy’d with gracious favours,—
That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign’s life to death and treachery!

Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Scroop, Cambridge, Grey, and Attendants.

King Henry. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.
My Lord of Cambridge, and my kind Lord of Masham,
And you, my gentle knight, give me your thoughts:
Think you not that the powers we bear with us
Will cut their passage through the force of France,
Doing the execution and the act
For which we have in head assembled them?

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.

King Henry. I doubt not that; since we are well persuaded
We carry not a heart with us from hence
That grows not in a fair consent with ours,
Nor leave not one behind that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cambridge. Never was monarch better fear’d and lov’d
Than is your majesty: there’s not, I think, a subject
That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. True: those that were your father’s enemies
Have steep’d their galls in honey, and do serve you
With hearts create of duty and of zeal.

King Henry. We therefore have great cause of thankfulness;
And shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit
According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steeled sinews toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

King Henry. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter, Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail’d against our person: we consider
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And on his more advice we pardon him.

Scroop. That ’s mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish’d, sovereign, lest example
Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

King Henry. O, let us yet be merciful.

Cambridge. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey. Sir,
You show great mercy, if you give him life,
After the taste of much correction.

King Henry. Alas, your too much care and love of me
Are heavy orisons ’gainst this poor wretch!
If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink’d at, how shall we stretch our eye
When capital crimes, chew’d, swallow’d, and digested,
Appear before us?—We ’ll yet enlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey, in their dear care
And tender preservation of our person,
Would have him punish'd.—And now to our French causes:
Who are the late commissioners?

Cambridge. I one, my lord:
Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.

Grey. And I, my royal sovereign.

King Henry. Then, Richard Earl of Cambridge, there is yours;—
There yours, Lord Scroop of Masham;—and, sir knight,
Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:—
Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.
My lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter,
We will aboard to night.—Why, how now, gentlemen!
What see you in those papers that you lose
So much complexion?—Look ye, how they change!
Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there,
That hath so cowarded and chas'd your blood
Out of appearance?

Cambridge. I do confess my fault;
And do submit me to your highness' mercy.

Grey. To which we all appeal.

Scroop.

King Henry. The mercy that was quick in us but late,
By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:
You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.—
See you, my princes and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge here,—
You know how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all appertinent
Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,

And sworn unto the practices of France,

To kill us here in Hampton: to the which
ACT II. SCENE II.

This knight, no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn.—But, O,
What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop? thou cruel,
Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature!
Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
Th'hat knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
Th'at almost mightst have coin'd me into gold,
Wouldst thou have practis'd on me for thy use,
May it be possible that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil
That might annoy my finger? 't is so strange,
That, though the truth of it stands off as gross
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason and murther ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them;
But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason and on murther:
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was
That wrought upon thee so preposterously
Hath got the voice in hell for excellence.
All other devils that suggest by treasons
Do botch and bungle up damnation
With patches, colours, and with forms, being fetch'd
From glistering semblances of piety;
But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou should'st do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.
If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,
He might return to vasty Tartar back,
And tell the legions, 'I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's.'
O, how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutiful?
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet,
Free from gross passion or of mirth or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such and so finely bolted didst thou seem:
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fraught man and best indued
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man.—Their faults are open:
Arrest them to the answer of the law;
And God acquit them of their practices!

Exeter. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard Earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry Lord
Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland.

Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd,
And I repent my fault more than my death;
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

Cambridge. For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention;
Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice,

Beseeching God and you to pardon me.

Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice.
ACT II. SCENE II.

At the discovery of most dangerous treason
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Prevented from a damned enterprise:
My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.

King Henry. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.

You have conspir'd against our royal person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Receive'd the golden earnest of our death;
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt,
And his whole kingdom into desolation.
Touching our person seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender.
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death;
The taste whereof, God of his mercy give
You patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences!—Bear them hence.

[Exeunt Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey, guarded.

Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason lurking in our way
To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.

Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France.

[Exeunt.}
SCENE III. London. Before a Tavern.

Enter Pistol, Hostess, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy.

Hostess. Prithee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pistol. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.—Bardolph, be blithe: Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins: Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead, And we must yearn therefore.

Bardolph. Would I were with him, wheresoe’er he is, either in heaven or in hell!

Hostess. Nay, sure, he’s not in hell: he’s in Arthur’s bosom, if ever man went to Arthur’s bosom. A’ made a finer end, and went away an it had been any christom child; a’ parted even just between twelve and one, even at the turning o’ the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets and play with flowers and smile upon his fingers’ ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and a’ babbled of green fields. ‘How now, Sir John!’ quoth I: ‘what, man! be o’ good cheer.’ So a’ cried out ‘God, God, God!’ three or four times. Now I, to comfort him, bid him a’ should not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So a’ bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and they were as cold as any stone, and so upward and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say he cried out of sack.

Hostess. Ay, that a’ did.

Bardolph. And of women.

Hostess. Nay, that a’ did not.

Boy. Yes, that a’ did; and said they were devils incarnate.

Hostess. A’ could never abide carnation; ‘t was a colour he never liked.
ACT II. SCENE IV.

Boy. Do you not remember, a' saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose, and a' said it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

Bardolph. Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pistol. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy lips. Look to my chattels and my movables: Let senses rule; the word is 'Pitch and Pay:'
Trust none;
For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes,
And hold-fast is the only dog, my dog:
Therefore, Caveto be thy counsellor.
Go, clear thy crystals.—Yoke-fellows in arms,
Let us to France; like horse-leeches, my boys,
'To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that's but unwholesome food, they say.

Pistol. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bardolph. Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but, adieu.

Hostess. Farewell; adieu. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. France. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King, the Dauphin, the Dukes of Berri and Bretagne, the Constable, and others.

French King. Thus comes the English with full power upon us;
And more than carefully it us concerns
To answer royally in our defences.
Therefore the Dukes of Berri and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth,
And you, Prince Dauphin, with all swift dispatch,
To line and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage and with means defendant;
For England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.
It fits us then to be as provident
As fear may teach us out of late examples
Left by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

_Dauphin._ My most redoubted father,
It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe;
For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,
Though war nor no known quarrel were in question,
But that defences, musters, preparations,
Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected,
As were a war in expectation.
Therefore, I say 't is meet we all go forth
To view the sick and feeble parts of France:
And let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance:
For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

_Constable._ O peace, Prince Dauphin!
You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question your grace the late ambassadors,
With what great state he heard their embassy,
How well supplied with noble counsellors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution,
And you shall find his vanities forespent
_Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly;_
ACT II. SCENE IV.

As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate.

Dauphin. Well, 't is not so, my lord high constable;
But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In cases of defence 't is best to weigh
The enemy more mighty than he seems:
So the proportions of defence are fill'd;
Which of a weak and niggardly projection
Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat with scantling
A little cloth.

French King. Think we King Harry strong;
And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him.
The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;
And he is bred out of that bloody strain.
That haunted us in our familiar paths.
Witness our too much memorable shame
When Cressy battle fatally was struck,
And all our princes captiv'd by the hand
Of that black name, Edward, Black Prince of Wales;
While that his mountain sire, on mountain standing,
Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,
Saw his heroical seed, and smil'd to see him,
Mangle the work of nature and deface
The patterns that by God and by French fathers
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Messenger. Ambassadors from Harry King of England
Do crave admittance to your majesty.

French King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them. [Exeunt Messenger and certain Lords.
You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dauphin. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs
Most spend their mouths when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short, and let them know
Of what a monarchy you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeter and train.

French King. From our brother England?
Exeter. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.
He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories that by gift of heaven,
By law of nature and of nations, longs
To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown
And all wide-stretched honours that pertain
By custom and the ordinance of times Unto the crown of France. That you may know
'Tis no sinister nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd,
He sends you this most memorable line, pedigree
In every branch truly demonstrative,
Willing you overlook this pedigree;
And when you find him evenly deriv'd
From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,
Edward the Third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him the native and true challenger.
French King. Or else what follows?
Exeter. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it:
Therefore in fiery tempest is he coming,
In thunder and in earthquake, like a Jove,
That, if requiring fail, he will compel;
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy
On the poor souls for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,
For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threatening, and my message;
Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

French King. For us, we will consider of this further:
To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother England.

Dauphin. For the Dauphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exeter. Scorn and defiance; slight regard, contempt,
And anything that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king; and if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He 'll call you to so hot an answer of it,
That caves and womby vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.

Dauphin. Say, if my father render fair return,
It is against my will; for I desire
Nothing but odds with England: to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with the Paris balls.

Exeter. He 'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe:
And, be assur'd, you 'll find a difference,
As we his subjects have in wonder found,
Between the promise of his greener days
And these he masters now. Now he weighs time
Even to the utmost grain; that you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

French King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.

Exeter. Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our king
Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already.

French King. You shall be soon dispatch'd with fair conditions:
A night is but small breath and little pause
To answer matters of this consequence.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]
ACT III.
PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chorus. Thus with imagin'd wing our swift scene flies,
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phœbus fanning:
Play with your fancies, and in them behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give
To sounds confus'd; behold the threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge. O, do but think
You stand upon the rivage and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight still,
Guarded with grandsires, babies, and old women,
Either past or not arriv'd to pith and puissance;
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege;
Behold the ordnance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harfleur.
Suppose the ambassador from the French comes back;
Tells Harry that the king doth offer him
Katherine his daughter, and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,
[Alarum, and chambers go off.
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.

[Exit.]
SCENE I. France. Before Harfleur.

Alarum. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloucester, and Soldiers, with scaling-ladders.

King Henry. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more,
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favoured rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide,
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
To his full height. On, on, you noble English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war proof,
Fathers that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument!
Dishonour not your mothers; now attest
That those whom you call'd fathers did beget you.
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war!—And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture: let us swear
That you are worth your breeding; which I doubt not,
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot:
Follow your spirit, and upon this charge
Cry 'God for Harry! England, and Saint George!'

[Exeunt. Alarum, and chambers go off.

Scene II. The same. Another Part of the Field.

Enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bardolph. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!
Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knocks are too hot;
and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.
Pistol. The plain-song is most just, for humours do abound:
'Knocks go and come, God's vassals drop and die;
And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Doth win immortal fame.'

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale and safety.

Pistol. And I:
'If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.'

Boy. 'As duly, but not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.'

Enter Fluellen.

Fluellen. Up to the preach, you dogs! avaunt, you cullions!

[Driving them forward.
Pistol. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage,
Abate thy rage, great duke!
Good bawcock, bate thy rage; use lenity, sweet chuck!
ACT III. SCENE II.

Nym. These be good humours! your honour wins bad humours.

[Exeunt all but Boy.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for indeed three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof a' faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; by the means whereof a' breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest a' should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are matched with as few good deeds; for a' never broke any man's head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal anything, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching, and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchers: which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villany goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up.

[Exit.

Enter Fluellen, Gower following.

Gower. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloucester would speak with you.

Fluellen. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines; for, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war: the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' adversary you may discuss unto the duke, look you, is dig't himself four yard under the coun-termines: by Cheshu, I think a' will plow up all, if there is not petter directions.

Gower. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman, a very valiant gentleman; i' faith.

Fluellen. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gower. I think it be.

Fluellen. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world: I will verify as much in his peard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter Macmorris and Captain Jamy.

Gower. Here a' comes; and the Scots captain, Captain Jamy, with him.

Fluellen. Captain Jamy is a marvellous falorous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition and knowledge in th' aunchient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say gud-day, Captain Fluellen.

Fluellen. God-den to your worship, goot Captain James.

Gower. How now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioners given o'er?

Macmorris. By Chrish, la! tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, la! in an hour. O, tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done!

Fluellen. Captain Macmorris, I peseech you now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly commu nication; partly to satisfy my opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.
ACT III. SCENE II.

Jamy. It saull be vary gud, gud feith, gud captains bath: and I saull quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that saull I, marry.

Macmorris. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes: it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet call us to the breach; and we talk, and, be Chrish, do nothing: ’t is shame for us all: so God sa’ me, ’t is shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is threats to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa’ me, la!

Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slomber, ay ’ll do gud service, or ay ’ll lig i’ the grund for it; ay, or go to death; and ay ’ll pay ’t as valorously as I may, that saull I surely do, that is the breff and the long. Marry, I wad full fain hear some question ’tween you tway.

Fluellen. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Macmorris. Of my nation! What ish my nation? What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal.

Fluellen. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, peradventure I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; peing as goot a man as yourself, poth in the disciplines of war, and in the derivation of my pirth, and in other particularities.

Macmorris. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gower. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. Au! that ’s a foul fault. [A parley sounded.

Gower. The town sounds a parley.
KING HENRY THE FIFTH.

Fluellen. Captain Macmorris, when there is more petter opportunity to pe required, look you, I will pe so pol'd as to tell you I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The same. Before the Gates.
The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English forces below. Enter King Henry and his train.

King Henry. How yet resolves the governor of the town?
This is the latest parle we will admit: Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves; Or, like to men proud of destruction, Defy us to our worst; for, as I am a soldier, A name that in my thoughts becomes me best, If I begin the battery once again, I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur Till in her ashes she lie buried.
The gates of mercy shall be all shut up,
And the flesh'd soldier, rough and hard of heart, In liberty of bloody hand shall range With conscience wide as hell, mowing like grass Your fresh-fair virgins and your flowering infants.
What is it then to me, if impious war, Array'd in flames, like to the prince of fiends, Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats Enlink'd to waste and desolation?
What is 't to me, when you yourselves are cause,
If your pure maidens fall into the hand Of hot and forcing violation?
What rein can hold licentious wickedness
When down the hill he holds his fierce career?
We may as bootless spend our vain command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send precepts to the leviathan.
ACT III. SCENE III.

To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,
Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet my soldiers are in my command;
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murther, spoil, and villany. inspiruous
If not, why, in a moment look to see
The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand
Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;
Your fathers taken by the silver beards,
And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls;
Your naked infants spitted upon pikes,
While the mad mothers with their howls confus'd,
Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry
At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.
What say you? will you yield, and this avoid,
Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd? sweeping up you resist

Governor. Our expectation hath this day an end:
The Dauphin, whom of succours we entreated,
Returns us that his powers are yet not ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king,
We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy.
Enter our gates; dispose of us and ours,
For we no longer are defensible.

King Henry. Open your gates.—Come, uncle Exeter,
Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain,
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,
The winter coming on, and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais.
To-night in Harfleur will we be your guest;
To-morrow for the march are we address'd.

[Flourish. The King and his train enter the town.]
Scene IV. Rouen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Katherine and Alice.

Katherine. Alice, tu as été en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Katherine. Je te prie, m'enseignez ; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez-vous la main en Anglais?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée de hand.

Katherine. De hand. Et les doigts?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, j'oublie les doigts? mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je pense qu'ils sont appelés de fingres; oui, de fingres.

Katherine. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingres. Je pense que je suis le bon écolier; j'ai gagné deux mots d'Anglais vîtement. Comment appelez-vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles? nous les appelons de nails.

Katherine. De nails. Écoutez; dites-moi, si je parle bien: de hand, de fingres, et de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglais.

Katherine. Dites-moi l'Anglais pour le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Katherine. Et le coude?

Alice. De elbow.

Katherine. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris dès à présent.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Katherine. Excusez-moi, Alice; écoutez: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Katherine. O Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oublie! de elbow. Comment appelez-vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Katherine. De nick. Et le menton?
ACT III. SCENE V.

Alice. De chin.

Katherine. De sin. Le col, de nick; de menton, de sin.

Alice. Oui. Sauf votre honneur, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Katherine. Je ne doute point d'apprendre, par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ai enseigné?

Katherine. Non, je reciterai à vous promptement: de hand, de fingres, de mails,—

Alice. De nails, madame.

Katherine. De nails, de arm, de ilbow.

Alice. Sauf votre honneur, de elbow.

Katherine. Ainsi dis-je; de elbow, de nick, et de sin. Comment appelez-vous le pied et la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame; et de coun.

Katherine. De foot et de coun! O Seigneur Dieu! ce sont mots de son mauvais, corruptible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user: je ne voudrais prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France pour tout le monde. Foh! le foot et le coun! Néanmoins, je reciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, de coun.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Katherine. C'est assez pour une fois: allons-nous à dîner.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same.

Enter the King of France, the Dauphin, the Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

French King. 'T is certain he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Constable. And if he be not fought withal, my lord,
Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.
Dauphin. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of us,
The emptying of our fathers' luxury,
Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,
Spirit up so suddenly into the clouds,
And overlook their grafters?

Bourbon. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards!
Mort de ma vie! if they march along
Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,
To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm
In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Constable. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull,
On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water,
A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,
Seem frosty? O, for honour of our land,
Let us not hang like roping icicles
Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people
Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields!
Poor we may call them in their native lords.

Dauphin. By faith and honour,
Our madams mock at us, and plainly say
Our mettle is bred out.

Bourbon. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavoltas high and swift corantos;
Saying our grace is only in our heels,
And that we are most lofty runaways.

French King. Where is Montjoy the herald? speed him hence:
Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.—
Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edg'd
More sharper than your swords, hie to the field:
ACT III. SCENE V.

Charles Delabreth, high constable of France;
You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri,
. Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
Jaques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,
Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussi, and Fauconberg,
Foix, Lestrale, Bouciqualt, and Charolois;
High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,
For your great seats now quit you of great shames.
Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land
With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur:
Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow
Upon the valleys, whose low vassal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon:
Go down upon him,—you have power enough,—
And in a captive chariot into Rouen
Bring him our prisoner.

Constable. This becomes the great.

Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick and famish'd in their march,
For I am sure, when he shall see our army,
He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And for achievement offer us his ransom.

French King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy,
And let him say to England that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give.—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Dauphin. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

French King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us.—
Now forth, lord constable and princes all,
And quickly bring us word of England's fall. [Exeunt.]
SCENE VI.  The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter Gower and Fluellen, meeting.

Gower. How now, Captain Fluellen! come you from the bridge?

Fluellen. I assure you, there is very excellent services committed at the pridge.

Gower. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Fluellen. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost power: he is not—Got pe praised and plessed!—any hurt in the world; but keeps the pridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an aunchient there at the pridge, I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the world; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gower. What do you call him?

Fluellen. He is called Aunchient Pistol.

Gower. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Fluellen. Here is the man.

Pistol. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours: The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Fluellen. Ay, I praise Got; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pistol. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart,
And of buxom valour, hath, by cruel fate,
And giddy Fortune's furious fickle wheel,
That goddess blind,

That stands upon the rolling restless stone—

Fluellen. By your patience, Aunchient Pistol. Fortune is painted plind, with a muffler afore her eyes, to signify to you.
that Fortune is plind; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls. In good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent moral.

_Pistol._ Fortune is Bardolph’s foe, and frowns on him; For he hath stolen a pax, and hanged must a’ be: A damned death! Let gallows gape for dog; let man go free And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate: But Exeter hath given the doom of death For pax of little price. Therefore, go speak: the duke will hear thy voice; And let not Bardolph’s vital thread be cut With edge of penny cord and vile reproach:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requite.

_Fluellen._ Aunchient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

_Pistol._ Why then, rejoice therefore.

_Fluellen._ Certainly, aunchient, it is not a thing to rejoice at; for if, look you, he were my prother, I would desire the duke to use his goot’ pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to pe used.

_Pistol._ Die and be damn’d! and figo for thy friendship!
_Fluellen._ It is well.

_Pistol._ The fig of Spain!
_Fluellen._ Very goot.

_Gower._ Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I re- member him now; a bawd, a cutpurse.

_Fluellen._ I ’ll assure you, a’ uttered as prave words at the pridge as you shall see in a summer’s day. But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

_Gower._ Why, ’t is a gull, a fool, a rogue, that now and then
"KING HENRY THE FIFTH."

goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders’ names: and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a source, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: and what a beard of the general’s cut and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook. 76

Fluellen. I tell you what, Captain Gower; I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the world he is: if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark you, the king is coming, and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Drum and colours. Enter King Henry, Gloucester, and Soldiers.

Got pless your majesty!

King Henry. How now, Fluellen! camest thou from the bridge?

Fluellen. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge: the French is gone off, look you: and there is gallant and most prave passages; marry, th’athversary was have possession of the pridge; but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge: I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

King Henry. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Fluellen. The perdition of th’athversary hath peen very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to pe executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames o' fire: and his lips plows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

King Henry. We would have all such offenders so cut off: and we give express charge, that in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for, none of the French upbraided or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Montjoy. You know me by my habit.

King Henry. Well then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Montjoy. My master's mind.

King Henry. Unfold it.

Montjoy. Thus says my king: Say thou to Harry of England: Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep: advantage is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him we could have rebuked him at Harfleur, but that we thought not good to bruise an injury till it were full ripe: now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial. England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.
King Henry. What is thy name? I know thy quality.
Montjoy. Montjoy.
King Henry. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,
And tell thy king I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais
Without impeachment; for, to say the sooth,
Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much
Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,
My people are with sickness much enfeebled,
My numbers lessen'd, and those few I have Almost no better than so many French;
Who when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,
I thought upon one pair of English legs
Did march three Frenchmen.—Yet, forgive me, God,
That I do brag thus!—This your air of France
Hath blown that vice in me; I must repent.
Go therefore, tell thy master here I am:
My ransom is this frail and worthless trunk,
My army but a weak and sickly guard;
Yet, God before, tell him we will come on,
Though France himself and such another neighbour
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.
Go, bid thy master well advise himself:
If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd,
We shall your tawny ground with your red blood
Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.
The sum of all our answer is but this:
We would not seek a battle, as we are,
Nor, as we are, we say we will not shun it:
So tell your master.
Montjoy. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

[Exit.

Gloucester. I hope they will not come upon us now.
King Henry. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.
March to the bridge; it now draws toward night. Beyond the river we 'll encamp ourselves, And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures, Orleans, Dauphin, with others.

Constable. Tut! I have the best armour of the world. Would it were day!

Orleans. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Constable. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orleans. Will it never be morning?

Dauphin. My Lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour?

Orleans. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

Dauphin. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns. Ça, ha! he bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs; le cheval volant, the Pegasus, chez les narines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk: he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orleans. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dauphin. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Constable. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dauphin. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.
Orleans. No more, cousin.

Dauphin. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea: turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all. 'T is a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world, familiar to us and unknown, to lay apart their particular functions and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise and began thus: 'Wonder of nature,'—

Orleans. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dauphin. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser, for my horse is my mistress.

Orleans. Your mistress bears well.

Dauphin. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Constable. Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dauphin. So perhaps did yours.

Dauphin. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.

Constable. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dauphin. 'Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au bourbier:' thou makest use of any thing.

Constable. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress, or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

Rambures. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?

Constable. Stars, my lord.

Dauphin. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Constable. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dauphin. That may be, for you bear a many superfluous-

Ly, and 't were more honour some were away.
ACT III. SCENE VII.

Constable. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

Dauphin. Would I were able to load him with his desert!—Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Constable. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: but I would it were morning; for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Rambures. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?

Constable. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dauphin. 'T is midnight; I'll go arm myself. [Exit. Orleans. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Rambures. He longs to eat the English.

Constable. I think he will eat all he kills.

Orleans. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Constable. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Orleans. He is simply the most active gentleman of France.

Constable. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.

Orleans. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Constable. Nor will do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still.

Orleans. I know him to be valiant.

Constable. I was told that by one that knows him better than you.

Orleans. What's he?

Constable. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said he cared not who knew it.

Orleans. He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in him.

Constable. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it but his lackey: 't is a hooded valour, and when it appears it will bate.
Orleans. Ill will never said well.

Constable. I will cap that proverb with 'There is flattery in friendship.'

Orleans. And I will take up that with 'Give the devil his due.'

Constable. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb with 'A pox of the devil.'

Orleans. You are the better at proverbs, by how much 'A fool's bolt is soon shot.'

Constable. You have shot over.

Orleans. 'T is not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Messenger. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.

Constable. Who hath measured the ground?

Messenger. The Lord Grandpré.

Constable. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning as we do.

Orleans. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!

Constable. If the English had any appreñension, they would run away.

Orleans. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Rambures. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orleans. Foolish curs, that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear and have their heads crushed like rotten apples! You may as well say, that's a valiant flea that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.
ACT III. SCENE VII.

Constable. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and then give them great meals of beef and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves and fight like devils.

Orleans. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Constable. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: come, shall we about it?

Orleans. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see, by ten
We shall have each a hundred Englishmen. [Exeunt.
THE FIELD OF AGINCOURT.

ACT IV.
PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chorus. Now entertain conjecture of a time
When creeping murmur and the poring dark
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
From camp to camp through the foul womb of night
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix’d sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch.
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face:
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs
'P'ercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation:
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.
Proud of their numbers and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tedious away. The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminat
The morning's danger; and their gesture sad,
Investing lank-lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O now, who will behold
The royal captain of this ruin'd band
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry 'Praise and glory on his head!'
For forth he goes and visits all his host,
Bids them good morrow with a modest smile,
And calls them brothers, friends, and countrymen.
Upon his royal face there is no note
How dread an army hath enrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watch'd night,
But freshly looks, and over-bears attaint
With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
A largess universal like the sun
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear. Then, mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night.
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where—O for pity!—we shall much disgrace
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill-dispos'd in brawl ridiculous,
The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see,
Minding true things by what their mockeries be.

[Exit.

---

SCENE I. The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloucester.

King Henry. Gloucester, 't is true that we are in great danger;
The greater therefore should our courage be.—
Good morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out;
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers,
Which is both healthful and good husbandry:
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all, admonishing
That we should dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France.

Erpingham. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better,
Since I may say, now lie I like a king.
ACT IV. SCENE I.

King Henry. 'T is good for men to love their present pains
Upon example; so the spirit is eas'd:
And when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave and newly move,
With casted slough and fresh legerity.
Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas.—Brothers both,
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good morrow to them, and anon
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Gloucester. We shall, my liege.

Eppingham. Shall I attend your grace?

King Henry. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
And then I would no other company.

Eppingham. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

[Exeunt all but King.

King Henry. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speak'st cheerfully.

Enter Pistol.

Pistol. Qui va là?

King Henry. A friend.
Pistol. Discuss unto me; art thou officer?
Or art thou base, common, and popular?

King Henry. I am a gentleman of a company.
Pistol. Trail'st thou the puissant pike?

King Henry. Even so. What are you?
Pistol. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

King Henry. Then you are a better than the king.
Pistol. The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame;
Of parents good, of fist most valiant.
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-strings
I love the lovely bully. What is thy name?

King Henry. Harry le Roy.

Pistol. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

King Henry. No, I am a Welshman.
Pistol. Know'st thou Fluellen?
King Henry. Yes.
Pistol. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate
Upon Saint Davy's day.

King Henry. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.
Pistol. Art thou his friend?
King Henry. And his kinsman too.
Pistol. The figo for thee, then!
King Henry. I thank you: God be with you!
Pistol. My name is Pistol call'd.
King Henry. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Captain Fluellen!

Fluellen. So! in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak lower.
It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and aunchient prerogatis and laws of the wars is not kept. If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor pibble pabble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to pe otherwise.

Gower. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.

Fluellen. If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, pe an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience, now?
ACT IV. SCENE I.

Gower. I will speak lower.
Fluellen. I pray you and peseech you that you will. 80
[Exeunt Gower and Fluellen.

King Henry. Though it appear a little out of fashion,
There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter Bates, Court, and Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Williams. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

King Henry. A friend.
Williams. Under what captain serve you?

King Henry. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Williams. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

King Henry. Even as men wracked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

King Henry. No; nor it is not meet he should. For, though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are:
yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but
I believe, as cold a night as 't is, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

King Henry. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

King Henry. I dare say you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this to feel other men's minds. Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.

Williams. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects. If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Williams. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make, when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all 'We died at such a place;' some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. I am afeard there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; who to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

King Henry. So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him; or if a servant, under his master's command transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation. But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitration of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some peradventure have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murther; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before-breach of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation than he was before guilty of those impieties for which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, He let him outlive that day to see His greatness and to teach others how they should prepare.

Williams. 'T is certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head; the king is not to answer it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

King Henry. I myself heard the king say he would not be ransomed.
Williams. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

King Henry. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Williams. You pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch. You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 't is a foolish saying.

King Henry. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Williams. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

King Henry. I embrace it.

Williams. How shall I know thee again?

King Henry. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Williams. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

King Henry. There.

Williams. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, 'This is my glove,' by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

King Henry. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Williams. Thou darest as well be hanged.

King Henry. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Williams. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

King Henry. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: but it is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper.

\Exeunt Soldiers.\
ACT IV. SCENE I.

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls,
Our debts, our careful wives,
Our children, and our sins lay on the king!
We must bear all. O hard condition,
Twin-born with greatness, subject to the breath
Of every fool, whose sense no more can feel
But his own wringing! What infinite heart’s-ease
Must kings neglect, that private men enjoy!
And what have kings, that privates have not too,
Save ceremony, save general ceremony?
And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer’st more
Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers?
What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?
O ceremony, show me but thy worth!
What is thy soul of adoration?
Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art less happy being fear’d
Than they in fearing.
What drink’st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison’d flattery? O, be sick, great greatness,
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!
Think’st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Canst thou, when thou command’st the beggar’s knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,
That play’st so subtly with a king’s repose;
I am a king that find thee, and I know
’Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The intertissued robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running fore the king,
The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp
That beats upon the high shore of this world;
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these, laid in bed majestical,
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd and vacant mind
Gets him to rest, cram'm'd with distressful bread,
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell,
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set
Sweats in the eye of Phæbus, and all night
Sleeps in Elysium; next day after dawn,
Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse,
And follows so the ever-running year,
With profitable labour, to his grave:
And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil and nights with sleep,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace,
Enjoys it, but in gross brain little wots
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erpingham. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.

King Henry. Good old knight, Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.

Erpingham. I shall do 't, my lord. [Exit.

King Henry. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts;
Possess them not with fear; take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them. Not to-day, O Lord,
O, not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard's body have interred new,
ACT IV. SCENE II.

And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a-day their wither'd hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;
Though all that I can do is nothing worth,
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Gloucester. My liege!
King Henry. My brother Gloucester's voice? Ay;
I know thy errand, I will go with thee:
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The French Camp.

Enter the Dauphin, Orleans, Rambures, and others.

Orleans. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords!
Dauphin. Montezy a cheval! My horse! varlet! laquais! ha!
Orleans. O brave spirit!
Dauphin. Via! les eaux et la terre.
Orleans. Rien puis? l'air et le feu.
Dauphin. Ciel, cousin Orleans.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!
Constable. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!
Dauphin. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And dout them with superfluous courage, ha!
King Henry the Fifth.

Rambures. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?
How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger.

Messenger. The English are embattled, you French peers.
Constable. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give each naked curtle-axe a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'T is positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe,
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not. What 's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket sonance and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much dare the field
That England shall couch down in fear and yield.

Enter Grandpré.

Grandpré. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
ACT IV. SCENE III.

And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmal bit
Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Constable. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dauphin. Shall we go send them dinners and fresh suits,
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Constable. I stay but for my guidon: to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come, away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The English Camp.

Enter the English Host; Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham, Salisbury, and Westmoreland.

Gloucester. Where is the king?
Bedford. The king himself is rode to view their battle.
Westmoreland. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand.

Exeter. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.
Salisbury. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.
God be wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge.
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-strings
I love the lovely bully. What is thy name?

_King Henry._ Harry le Roy.

_Pistol._ Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

_King Henry._ No, I am a Welshman.

_Pistol._ Know'st thou Fluellen?

_King Henry._ Yes.

_Pistol._ Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate

Upon Saint Davy's day.

_King Henry._ Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

_Pistol._ Art thou his friend?

_King Henry._ And his kinsman too.

_Pistol._ The figo for thee, then!

_King Henry._ I thank you: God be with you!

_Pistol._ My name is Pistol call'd.

[Exit.

_King Henry._ It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

_Gower._ Captain Fluellen!

_Fluellen._ So! in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and aunchient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept. If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor nibble pabble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to pe otherwise.

_Gower._ Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.

_Fluellen._ If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, pe an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience, now?
ACT IV. SCENE I.

Gower. I will speak lower.

Fluellen. I pray you and peseech you that you will. 80

[Exeunt Gower and Fluellen.

King Henry. Though it appear a little out of fashion,
There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter Bates, Court, and Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to de-side the approach of day.

Williams. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

King Henry. A friend.

Williams. Under what captain serve you?

King Henry. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Williams. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

King Henry. Even as men wracked upon a sand, that look
to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

King Henry. No; nor it is not meet he should. For,
though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are:
yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appear-ce of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but
I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

King Henry. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

King Henry. I dare say you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this to feel other men's minds. Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.

Williams. That 's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects. If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Williams. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make, when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all 'We died at such a place; ' some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. I am afeard there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; who to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

King Henry. So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him; or if a servant, under his master's command transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation. But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the ar-itrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some peradventure have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murther; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before-breach of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, He let him outlive that day to see His greatness and to teach others how they should prepare.

Williams. 'T is certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head; the king is not to answer it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet
I determine to fight lustily for him.

King Henry. I myself heard the king say he would not be ransomed.
Williams. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

King Henry. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Williams. You pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch. You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 'tis a foolish saying.

King Henry. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Williams. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

King Henry. I embrace it.

Williams. How shall I know thee again?

King Henry. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Williams. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

King Henry. There.

Williams. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, 'This is my glove,' by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

King Henry. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Williams. Thou darest as well be hanged.

King Henry. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Williams. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

King Henry. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: but it is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper.

\[ Exit Soldiers. \]
ACT IV. SCENE I.

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls,
Our debts, our careful wives,
Our children, and our sins lay on the king!
We must bear all. O hard condition,
Twin-born with greatness, subject to the breath
Of every fool, whose sense no more can feel
But his own wringing! What infinite heart’s-ease
Must kings neglect, that private men enjoy!
And what have kings, that privates have not too,
Save ceremony, save general ceremony?
And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer’st more
Of mortal grieves than do thy worshippers?
What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?
O ceremony, show me but thy worth!
(What is thy soul of adoration?
Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art less happy being fear’d
Than they in fearing.
What drink’st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison’d flattery? O, be sick, great greatness,
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!
Think’st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Canst thou, when thou command’st the beggar’s knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,
That play’st so subtly with a king’s repose;
I am a king that find thee, and I know
’Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The intertissued robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running fore the king,
The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp
That beats upon the high shore of this world;
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these, laid in bed majestical,
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd and vacant mind
Gets him to rest, cram'd with distressful bread,
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell,
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set
Sweats in the eye of Phoebus, and all night
Sleeps in Elysium; next day after dawn,
Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse,
And follows so the ever-running year,
With profitable labour, to his grave:
And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil and nights with sleep,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace,
Enjoys it, but in gross brain little wots
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erpingham. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.

King Henry. Good old knight,
Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.

Erpingham. I shall do 't, my lord. [Exit.

King Henry. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts;
Possess them not with fear; take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them. Not to-day, O Lord,
O, not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard's body have interred new,
ACT IV. SCENE II.

And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a-day their wither'd hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;
Though all that I can do is nothing worth,
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Gloucester. My liege!

King Henry. My brother Gloucester's voice? Ay;
I know thy errand, I will go with thee:
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The French Camp.

Enter the Dauphin, Orleans, Rambures, and others.

Orleans. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords!
Dauphin. Montez à cheval! My horse! varlet! laquais! ha!

Orleans. O brave spirit!
Dauphin. Via! les eaux et la terre.
Orleans. Rien puis? l'air et le feu.
Dauphin. Ciel, cousin Orleans.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!

Constable. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!

Dauphin. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And doute them with superfluous courage, ha!
Rambures. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?
How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger.

Messenger. The English are embattled, you French peers.
Constable. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give each naked curtale-axe a stain,
That our French gallants shall today draw out,
And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe,
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not. What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket sonance and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much dare the field
That England shall couch down in fear and yield.

Enter Grandpré.

Grandpré. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
ACT IV. SCENE III.

And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimbal bit
Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Constable. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dauphin. Shall we go send them dinners and fresh suits,
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Constable. I stay but for my guidon: to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come, away!

SCENE III. The English Camp.

Enter the English Host; Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham, Salisbury, and Westmoreland.

Gloucester. Where is the king?
Bedford. The king himself is rode to view their battle.
Westmoreland. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand.

Exeter. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.
Salisbury. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.
God be wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully, my noble Lord of Bedford,
My dear Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter,
And my kind kinsman, warriors all, adieu!

   Bedford. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

   Exeter. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day.
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it,
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

[Exit Salisbury.

   Bedford. He is as full of valour as of kindness;
Princely in both.

Enter the King.

   Westmoreland. O that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England
That do no work to-day!

   King Henry. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland? No, my fair cousin:
If we are mark'd to die, we are enow
To do our country loss; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
It yearns me not if men my garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.
No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour
As one man more, methinks, would share from me
For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more!

Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
ACT IV. SCENE III.

Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We would not die in that man's company
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is call'd the feast of Crispian:
He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say 'To-morrow is Saint Crispian:'
Then will he strip his sleeve and show his scars,
And say 'These wounds I had on Crispin's day.'
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he 'll remember with advantages
What feats he did that day: then shall our names,
Familiar in his mouth as household words,—
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester,—
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered,
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers:
For he to-day that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition:
And gentlemen in England now a-bed
Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here,
And hold their manhoods cheap whiles any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Enter Salisbury.

Salisbury. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:
Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

The day, my friends, and all things stay for me. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The French Camp.

Enter the Dauphin, Orleans, Rambures, and others.

Orleans. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords!
Dauphin. Montez à cheval! My horse! varlet! laquais! ha!
Orleans. O brave spirit!
Dauphin. Via! les eaux et la terre.
Orleans. Rien puis? l'air et le feu.
Dauphin. Ciel, cousin Orleans.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!
Constable. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!
Dauphin. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And doute them with superfluous courage, ha!
KING HENRY THE FIFTH.

Rambures. What, will you have them weep our horses’ blood?
How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger.

Messenger. The English are embattled, you French peers.
Constable. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give each naked curtle-axe a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o’erturn them.
’T is positive ’gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe,
Though we upon this mountain’s basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not. What ’s to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket sonance and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much dare the field
That England shall couch down in fear and yield.

Enter Grandpré.

Grandpré. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field: Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmal bit
Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Constable. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dauphin. Shall we go send them dinners and fresh suits,
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Constable. I stay but for my guidon: to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come, away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day. [Exeunt.

Scene III. The English Camp.

Enter the English Host; Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham, Salisbury, and Westmoreland.

Gloucester. Where is the king?

Bedford. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

Westmoreland. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand.

Exeter. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.

Salisbury. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.

God be wi'you, princes all; I'll to my charge.
Alarum. Enter King Henry and forces, Warwick, Gloucester, Exeter, and others.

King Henry. I was not angry since I came to France
Until this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald;
Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill:
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field; they do offend our sight.
If they'll do neither, we will come to them,
And make them skirr away as swift as stones,
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings.
Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have,
And not a man of them that we shall take
Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exeter. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.
Gloucester. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.

King Henry. How now! what means this, herald? know'st thou not
That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransom?
Com'st thou again for ransom?

Montjoy. No, great king:
I come to thee for charitable license,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field
To look o'er our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men.
For many of our princes—woe the while!—
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes; and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies!

King Henry. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not if the day be ours or no;
For yet a many of your horsemen peer
And gallop o’er the field.

Montjoy. The day is yours.

King Henry. Praised be God, and not our strength, for it!
What is this castle call’d that stands hard by?

Montjoy. They call it Agincourt.

King Henry. Then call we this the field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Fluellen. Your grandfather of famous memory, an ’t please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Black Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most brave pattle here in France.

King Henry. They did, Fluellen.

Fluellen. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did goat service in a gard-en where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty know, to this hour is an honour-able padge of the service; and I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy’s day.

King Henry. I wear it for a memorable honour;
For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Fluellen. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty’s Welsh ploot out of your body, I can tell you that: Got pless it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

King Henry. Thanks, good my countryman.

Fluellen. By Cheshu, I am your majesty’s countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not to pe ashamed of your majesty, praised pe Got, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

King Henry. God keep me so!—Our heralds go with him:
Bring me just notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to Williams. Exeunt Heralds with Montjoy.

Exeter. Soldier, you must come to the king.

King Henry. Soldier, why wearest thou that glove in thy cap?

Williams. An't please your majesty, 't is the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

King Henry. An Englishman?

Williams. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if alive and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' th' ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap, which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear if alive, I will strike it out soundly.

King Henry. What think you, Captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Fluellen. He is a craven and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

King Henry. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Fluellen. Though he pe as goot a gentleman as the tevil is, as Lucifer and Pelzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he pe perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain and a Jack-sauce, as ever his plack shoe trod upon Got's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la!

King Henry. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meetest the fellow.

Williams. So I will, my liege, as I live.

King Henry. Who servest thou under?

Williams. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Fluellen. Gower is a goot captain, and is goot knowledge and literatured in the wars.

King Henry. Call him hither to me, soldier.
ACT IV. SCENE VII.

Williams. I will, my liege.

[Exit.

King Henry. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me and stick it in thy cap: when Alençon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost me love.

Fluellen. Your grace does me as great honours as can pe desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once, an please Got of his grace that I might see.

King Henry. Knowest thou Gower?

Fluellen. He is my dear friend, an please you.

King Henry. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Fluellen. I will fetch him. [Exit.

King Henry. My Lord of Warwick, and my brother Gloucester, Follow Fluellen closely at the heels:

The glove which I have given him for a favour
May haply purchase him a box o’ th’ ear;
It is the soldier’s: I by bargain should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:
If that the soldier strike him, as I judge
By his blunt bearing he will keep his word,
Some sudden mischief may arise of it;
For I do know Fluellen valiant
And, touch’d with choler, hot as gunpowder,
And quickly will return an injury:
Follow, and see there be no harm between them.—
Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt.
Scene VIII. Before King Henry's Pavilion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Williams. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Fluellen. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I peseech you now, come apace to the king: there is more goot toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Williams. Sir, know you this glove?

Fluellen. Know the glove! I know the glove is a glove.

Williams. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

[Strikes him.

Fluellen. 'Sblood! an arrant traitor as any is in the universal world, or in France, or in England!

Gower. How now, sir! you villain!

Williams. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Fluellen. Stand away, Captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Williams. I am no traitor.

Fluellen. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alençon's.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester.

Warwick. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Fluellen. My Lord of Warwick, here is—praised pe Got for it!—a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

King Henry. How now! what's the matter?

Fluellen. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look ACT IV. SCENE VIII.

your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon.

Williams. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him, if he did. I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Fluellen. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rascally, peggarly, lousy knave it is: I hope your majesty is peer me testimony and witness, and will avouchment, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me; in your conscience, now?

King Henry. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

'I was I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike;
And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Fluellen. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

King Henry. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Williams. All offences, my lord, come from the heart:
ever came any from mine that might offend your majesty.

King Henry. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Williams. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you take it for your own fault and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

King Henry. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,

And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow;
And wear it for an honour in thy cap
Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns:
And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Fluellen. Py this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly. Hold, there is twelve pence for you; and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of prawls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.

Williams. I will none of your money.

Fluellen. It is with a good will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you pe so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: 't is a goot silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

King Henry. Now, herald, are the dead number'd?

Herald. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French.

King Henry. What prisoners of good sort are taken, uncle?

Exeter. Charles Duke of Orleans, nephew to the king; John Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouciqualt:
Of other lords and barons, knights and squires,
Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

King Henry. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French
That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number,
And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead
One hundred twenty-six: added to these,
Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,
Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights:
So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;
The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood and quality.
The names of those their nobles that lie dead:
Charles Delabreth, high constable of France;
Jacques of Chatillon, admiral of France;
The master of the cross-bows, Lord Rambures;
Great Master of France, the brave Sir Guichard Dauphin,
John Duke of Alençon, Anthony Duke of Brabant,
The brother to the Duke of Burgundy,
And Edward Duke of Bar: of lusty earls,
Grandpré and Roussi, Fauconberg and Foix,
Beaumont and Marle, Vaudemont and Lestrale.
Here was a royal fellowship of death!—
Where is the number of our English dead?

[Herald shows him another paper.
Edward the Duke of York, the Earl of Suffolk,
Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire:
None else of name; and of all other men
But five and twenty.—O God, thy arm was here;
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all!—When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss
On one part and on the other?—Take it, God,
For it is none but thine!

Exeter.
'T is wonderful!

King Henry. Come, go we in procession to the village:
And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this, or take that praise from God
Which is his only.

Fluellen. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

King Henry. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment,
That God fought for us.

Fluellen. Yes, my conscience, he did us great goot.

King Henry. Do we all holy rites;
Let there be sung 'Non nobis' and 'Te Deum.'
The dead with charity enclos'd in clay,
We 'll then to Calais; and to England then;
Where ne'er from France arriv'd more happy men. \Exeunt.
TROYES.

ACT V.
PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chorus. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story, That I may prompt them: and of such as have, I humbly pray them to admit the excuse Of time, of numbers, and due course of things, Which cannot in their huge and proper life Be here presented. Now we beat the king ACT V. PROLOGUE.

Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Behold, the English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which like a mighty whiffler fore the king
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath thought that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;
Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent
Quite from himself to God. But now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens!
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Cæsar in;
As, by a lower but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;—
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of England’s stay at home;
The emperor coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them;—and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanc’d,
Till Harry’s back-return again to France:

H
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
The interim, by remembering you 't is past.
Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.  [Exit.

SCENE I. France. The English Camp.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Nay, that 's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Fluellen. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, Captain Gower: the rascally, scald, peggarly, lousy, pragging knave, Pistol, which you and yourself and all the world know to pe no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits, he is come to me and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and pid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not preed no contention with him; but I will pe so pold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gower. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Fluellen. 'T is no matter for his swellings nor his turkeycocks.—Got pless you, Aunchient Pistol! you scurvy, lousy knave, Got pless you!

Pistol. Ha! art thou bedlam? dost thou thirst, base Trojan,
To have me fold up Parca's fatal web?
Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Fluellen. I peseech you heartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek: because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections and your appetites and your digestions does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it,

Pistol. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.
ACT V. SCENE I.

Fluellen. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.] Will you pe so goat, scald knave, as eat it?

Pistol. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Fluellen. You say very true, scald knave, when Got's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it. [Strikes him.] You called me yesterday mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gower. Enough, captain: you have astonished him.

Fluellen. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days.—Pity, I pray you; it is goat for your green wound and your bloody coxcomb.

Pistol. Must I bite?

Fluellen. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pistol. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge: I eat, and yet I swear—

Fluellen. Eat, I pray you: will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear py.

Pistol. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see I eat.

Fluellen. Much goat do you, scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is goat for your prokne coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pistol. Good.

Fluellen. Ay, leeks is goat. Hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pistol. Me a groat!

Fluellen. Yes, verily and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pistol. I take thy groat in earnest of revenge.

Fluellen. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in cudgels: you shall pe a woodmonger, and puy nothing of me but cudgels. Got b' wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.
KING HENRY THE FIFTH.

Pistol. All hell shall stir for this.

Gower. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

Pistol. Doth Fortune play the huswife with me now? 72 News have I, that my Nell is dead i' the spital Of malady of France; And there my rendezvous is quite cut off. Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs Honour is cudgell'd. Well, bawd will I turn, And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand. To England will I steal, and there I' ll steal: And patches will I get unto these cudgell'd scars, And swear I got them in the Gallia wars.

[Exit.

Scene II. Troyes. A Room in the Palace.

Enter, at one door, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloucester, Warwick, Westmoreland, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel, the Princess Katherine, Alice, and other Ladies, the Duke of Burgundy, and his train.

King Henry. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met! Unto our brother France, and to our sister, Health and fair time of day; joy and good wishes To our most fair and princely cousin Katherine; And, as a branch and member of this royalty, By whom this great assembly is contriv'd, ACT V. SCENE II.

We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy;
And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!

French King. Right joyous are we to behold your face,
Most worthy brother England; fairly met:
So are you, princes English, every one.

Queen Isabel. So happy be the issue, brother England,
Of this good day and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes;
Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them
Against the French, that met them in their bent,
The fatal balls of murthering basilisks:
The venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality, and that this day
Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

King Henry. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

Queen Isabel. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Burgundy. My duty to you both, on equal love,
Great Kings of France and England! That I have labour'd
With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours,
To bring your most imperial majesties
Unto this bar and royal interview,
Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.
Since then my office hath so far prevail'd
That, face to face and royal eye to eye,
You have congruated, let it not disgrace me,
If I demand, before this royal view,
What rub or what impediment there is,
Why that the naked, poor, and mangled Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties, and joyful births,
Should not in this best garden of the world,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage?
Alas, she hath from France too long been chas'd,
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in it own fertility.
Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned dies; her hedges even-pleach'd,
Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs; her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon, while that the coulter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery;
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness, and nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.
And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildness,
Even so our houses and ourselves and children
Have lost, or do not learn for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country;
But grow like savages,—as soldiers will
That nothing do but meditate on blood,—
To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural.
Which to reduce into our former favour
You are assembled: and my speech entreats
That I may know the let, why gentle Peace
Should not expel these inconveniences
And bless us with her former qualities.

King Henry. If, Duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,
Whose want gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenours and particular effects
You have enschedul'd briefly in your hands.

Burgundy. The king hath heard them; to the which as yet

There is no answer made.
King Henry. Well then the peace,
Which you before so urg'd, lies in his answer.

French King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'erglanc'd the articles: pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

King Henry. Brother, we shall.—Go, uncle Exeter,
And brother Clarence, and you, brother Gloucester,
Warwick and Huntingdon, go with the king;
And take with you free power to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageable for our dignity,
Any thing in or out of our demands,
And we'll consign thereto.—Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?

Queen Isabel. Our gracious brother, I will go with them:
Haply a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles too nicely urg'd be stood on.

King Henry. Yet leave our cousin Katherine here with us:
She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Queen Isabel. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all except Henry, Katherine, and Alice.

King Henry. Fair Katherine, and most fair,
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady's ear
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Katherine. Your majesty sall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

King Henry. O fair Katherine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Katherine. Pardonnez-moi, I cannot tell vat is 'like me.'
King Henry. An angel is like you, Kate, and you are like an angel.

Katherine. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges?

Alice. Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi dit-il.

King Henry. I said so, dear Katherine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Katherine. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

King Henry. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Oui, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de princess.

King Henry. The princess is the better Englishwoman. I' faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king that thou wouldst think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say 'I love you:' then if you urge me farther than to say 'do you in faith?' I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; i' faith, do: and so clap hands and a bargain: how say you, lady?

Katherine. Sauf votre honneur, me understand vell.

King Henry. Marry, if you would put me to verses or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure; and for the other, I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like 'a butcher and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off. But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to say to thee that I shall die, is true; but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet—I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or rather the sun and not the moon; for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me; and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king. And what sayest thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Katherine. Is it possible dat I sould love de enemy of France?

King Henry. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Katherine. I cannot tell vat is dat.

King Henry. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Quand j'ai le possession de France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi,—let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speed!—donc votre est France et vous êtes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Katherine. Sauf votre honneur, le Français que vous parlez, il est meilleur que l'Anglais lequel je parle.

King Henry. No, faith, is 't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly-falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English, canst thou love me?

Katherine. I cannot tell.

King Henry. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night, when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou beest mine, Kate, as I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt, I get thee with scambling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder. What sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

Katherine. I do not know dat.

King Henry. No; 't is hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part, and for my English moiety take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katherine du monde, mon très-cher et divin déesse?

Katherine. Your majestee ave fausse French enough to deceive de most sage demoiselle dat is en France.

King Henry. Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now, beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me:
therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most fair Katherine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say 'Harry of England, I am thine:' which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud 'England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine;' who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katherine, break thy mind to me in broken English; wilt thou have me?

    Katherine. Dat is as it sall please de roi mon père.

    King Henry. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

    Katherine. Den it sall also content me.

    King Henry. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

    Katherine. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: ma foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissiez votre grandeur en baisant la main d'une votre indigne serviteur; excusez-moi, je vous supplie, mon très-puissant seigneur.

    King Henry. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

    Katherine. Les dames et demoiselles pour être baiésées devant leur noces, il n'est pas la coutume de France.

    King Henry. Madam my interpreter, what says she?

    Alice. Dat it is not be de fashion pour les ladies of France,—I cannot tell vat is baiser en English.
King Henry. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre bettre que moi.

King Henry. It is not a fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Oui, vraiment.

King Henry. O Kate, nice customs curtsy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouth of all find-faults; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Re-enter the French King and his Queen, Burgundy, and other Lords.

Burgundy. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

King Henry. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Burgundy. Is she not apt?

King Henry. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Burgundy. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to King Henry. Yet they do wink and yield, as love is blind and enforces.

Burgundy. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

King Henry. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

Burgundy. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes.

King Henry. This moral ties me over to time and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Burgundy. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

King Henry. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

French King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspective, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never entered.

King Henry. Shall Kate be my wife?

French King. So please you.

King Henry. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her: so the maid that stood in the way for my wish shall show me the way to my will.

French King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

King Henry. Is’t so, my lords of England?

Westmoreland. The king hath granted every article:
His daughter first, and then in sequel all,
According to their firm proposed natures.

Exeter. Only he hath not yet subscribed this:
where your majesty demands that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form and with this addition; in French, Notre très cher fils Henri, roi d’Angleterre, héritier de France; and thus in Latin, Præclarissimus filius noster Henricus, rex Angliæ, et hæres Franciæ.

French King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied,
But your request shall make me let it pass.

King Henry. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance,
Let that one article rank with the rest;
And thereupon give me your daughter.

French King. Take her, fair son, and from her blood, raise up
Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms
Of France and England, whose very shores look pale
With envy of each other's happiness,
May cease their hatred, and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord
In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

King Henry. Now, welcome, Kate:—and bear me witness all,
That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.       [Flourish.

Queen Isabel. God, the best maker of all marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one!
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league;
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive each other. God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

King Henry. Prepare we for our marriage:—on which day
My lord of Burgundy, we 'll take your oath,
And all the peers', for surety of our leagues.
EPilogue.

Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me;
And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

[Senne.  Exeunt.

E P I L O G U E.

Enter Chorus.

Chorus. Thus far, with rough and all-unable pen,
Our bending author hath pursued the story,
In little room confining mighty men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but in that small most greatly liv’d
This star of England: Fortune made his sword;
By which the world’s best garden he achiev’d,
And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crown’d King
Of France and England, did this king succeed;
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown; and, for their sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take.

[Exit.]
Pistol. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge: I eat, and yet I swear—(v. i. 42).

INTRODUCTION.

The following extracts from Holinshed (which we select from Halliwell's Introduction) contain the more important passages used by the poet in the play:

A.D. 1413.—"Whilst in the Lent season the king laye at Kilvingworth, there came to him from Charles Dolphin of France certeine ambassadors, that brought with them a barrell of Paris balles, which from their maister they presented to him for a token that was taken in verie ill part, as sent in scorne, to signifie that it was more meet for the king to passe the time with such childish exercise, than to attempt any worthie exploit. Wherfore the K. wrote to him that, yet ought long, he would tosse him some London balles that perchance should shake the waile of the best court in France."
NOTES.

A.D. 1414.—"In the second yeare of his reigne, king Henrie called his high court of parlement, the last daie of Aprill, in the towne of Leicester, in which parlement manie profitable lawes were concluded, and manie petitions mooved, were for that time deferred. Amongst which, one was, that a bill exhibited in the parlement holden at Westminster in the eleventh yeare of king Henrie the fourth (which, by reason the king was then troubled with civill discord, came to none effect) might now with good deliberation be pondered, and brought to some good conclusion.
The effect of which supplication was, that the temporall lands devoutlie given, and disordinatelic spent by religious, and other spirituall persons, should be seized into the kings hands, sith the same might suffice to mainteine, to the honor of the king, and defense of the realme, fifteene earls, fifteene hundred knights, six thousand and two hundred esquirers, and a hundred almesse-houses, for reliefe onlie of the poore, impotent, and needie persons, and the king to have cleerlie to his coffers twentie thousand pounds, with manie other provisions and values of religious houses, which I passe over.

"This bill was much noted, and more feared among the religious sort, whom suerlie it touched verie neere, and therefore to find remedy against it, they determined to assaie all waies to put by and overthrow this bill; wherein they thought best to trie if they might moove the kings mood with some sharpe invention, that he should not regard the inopportune petitions of the commons. Whereupon, on a daie in the parlement, Henrie Chichelie, archbishop of Canturburie, made a pithie oration, wherein he declared, how not onelie the duchies of Normandie and Aquitaine, with the counties of Anjou and Maine, and the countrie of Gascoigne, were by undoubted title apperteyning to the king, as to the lawfull and onelie heire of the same; but also to the whole realme of France, as heire to his great grandfather king Edward the third.

"Herein did he much invece against the surmised and false fained law Salique which the Frenchmen alledge ever against the kings of England in barre of their just title to the crowne of France. The verie words of that supposed law are these, In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant, that is to saie, into the Salique land let not women succeed. Which the French glossers expound to be the realme of France, and that this law was made by king Pharamond; whereas yet their owne authors affirme that the land Salique is in Germanie betweene the rivers of Elbe and Sala; and that when Charles the great had overcome the Saxons, he placed there certeine Frenchmen, which having in disdeine the dishonest maners of the Germane women, made a law, that the females should not succeed to any inheritance within that land, which at this daie is called Meisen, so that, if this be true, this law was not made for the realme of France, nor the Frenchmen possessed the land Salique, till foure hundred and one and twentie yeares after the death of Pharamond, the supposed maker of this Salique law, for this Pharamond deceased in the yeare 426, and Charles the great subdued the Saxons, and placed the Frenchmen in those parts beyond the river of Sala, in the yeare 805.

"Moreover, it appeareth by their owne writers that king Pepine, which deposed Childerike, claimed the crowne of France, as heire generall, that he was descended of Bithild, daughter to king Clothair the first: Hugh Capet also, who usurped the crowne upon Charles Duke of Lorraine, the sole heire male of the line and stocke of Charles the great, to make his title seeme true, and appeare good, though in deed it was starke naught, conveyed himselfe as heire to the ladie Lingard, daughter to king Charlemaine sonne to Lewes the emperour, that was son to Charles the great. King Lewes also the tenth, otherwise called saint Lewes, being verie heir to the said usurper Hugh Capet, could never be satisfied in his conscience how he might justlie keepe and possesse the crowne of France, till he was persuaded and fullie instructed that queene Isabell his grandmother was lineallie descended of the ladie Ermengard daughter and heire to the above named Charles duke of Lorraine, by the which marriage, the bloud and line of Charles the great was againe united and restored to the crowne and scepter of France, so that more cleare than the sunne it openlie appeareth that the title of king Pepin, the claime of Hugh Capet, the possession of Lewes, yea and the French kings to this daie, are derived and conveyed from the heire female, though they would under the colour of such a fained law, barre the kings and princes of this realme of England of their right and lawfull inheritance.

"The archbishop further allledged out of the booke of Numbers this saieing: 'When a man dieth without a sonne, let the inheritance descend to his daughter.' At length, having said sufficientlie for the proove of the kings just and lawfull title to the crowne of France, he exhorted him to advance forth his banner to fight for his right, to conquer his inheritance, to spare neither bloud, sword, nor fire, sith his warre was just, his cause good, and his claime true. And to the intent his loving chapleins and obedient subjects of the spiritualtie might show themselves willing and desirous to aid his majestie, for the recoverie of his ancient right and true inheritance, the archbishop declared that in their spiritual convocation, they had granted to his highnesse such a summe of monie, as never by no spiritual persons was to any prince before those daies given or advanced.

"When the archbishop had ended his prepared tale, Rafe Nevill, earle of Westmerland, and as then lord Warden of the marches against Scotland, understanding that the king, upon a couragious desire to recover his right in France, would suerlie take the wars in hand, thought good to moove the king to begin first with Scotland, and thereupon declared how easie a matter it should be to make a conquest there, and how greatlie the same should further his wished purpose for the subduing of the Frenchmen, concluding the sum of his tale with this old saying: that Who so will France win, must with Scotland first begin. Many matters he touched, as well to show how necessarie the conquest of Scotland should be, as also to proove how just a cause the king had to attempt it; trusting to persuade the king and all other to be of his opinion.

"But after he had made an end, the duke of Excester, uncle to the king, a man well learned and wise, who had beene sent into Italie by his father, intending that he should have been a preest, replied against the earle of Westmerlands oration, affirming rather that he which would Scotland win, he with France must first begin. For if the king might once compasse the conquest of France, Scotland could not long resist; so that conquer France, and Scotland would soon obieie. For where should the Scots lerne policie and skill to defend themselves if they had not their bringing up and training in France. If the French pensions maintaine not the Scottish nobilitie, in what case should they be. Then take awaie France, and the Scots will soon be tamed; France being to Scotland the same that the sap is to the tree, which, being taken awaie, the tree must needs die and wither.

"To be briefe, the duke of Excester used such earnest and pithie persuasions to induce the king and the whole assemblie of the parlement to credit his words, that immediatlie after he had made an end, all the companie beganne to cry, Warre, warre; France, France. Hereby the bill for dissolving of religious houses was clearlie set aside, and nothing thought on but onelie the recovering of France, according as the archbishop had mooved. . . .

"Immediatlie after, the king sent over into France his uncle the duke of Excester, the lord Greie ademarrell of England, the archbishop of Dubline, and the bishop of Norwich, ambassadors unto the French king, with five hundred horse, which were lodged in the temple house in Paris, keeping such triumphant cheere in their lodging, and such a solamne estate in their riding through the citie, that the Parisiens and all the Frenchmen had no small merveil at their honorable port. The French king received them verie honorably and banketted them right sumptuouslie, shewing to them justs and martiall pastimes, by the space of three days together, in the which justs the king himselfe, to shew his courage and activitie to the Englishmen, manfullie brake speares and lustilie tournied. When the triumph was ended, the English ambassadors, having a time appointed them to declare their message, admitted to the French kings presence, required of him to deliver unto the king of England the realme and crowne of France, with the enter duichies of Aquitaine, Normandie, and Anjou, with the countries of Poictiou and Maine. Manie other requests they made: and this offered withall, that if the French king would, without warre and effusion of Christian bloud, render to the king their maister his verie right and lawfull inheritance, that he would be content to take in mariaghe the ladie Katharine, daughter to the French king, and to indow her with all the duichies and countries before rehearsed; and if he would not so doo, then the king of England did expresse and signifie to him, that with the aid of God, and helpe of his people, he would recover his inheritance, wrongfullie withholden from him, with mortall warre, and dint of sword. . . .

"The Frenchmen being not a little abashed at these demands, thought not to make anie absolute answer in so weightie a cause, till they had further breathed; and therefore praied the English ambassadors to saie to the king their maister, that they now having no opportunitie to conclude in so high a matter, would shortlie send ambassadors into England, which should certifie and declare to the king their whole mind, purpose, and intent. The English ambassadors returned with this answer, making relation of everie thing that was said or done. King Henrie, after the returne of his ambassadors, determined fullie to make warre in France, conceiving a good and perfect hope to have fortunate successe, sith victorie for the most part followeth where right leadeth, being advanced forward by justice, and set forth by equitie." . . .

A.D. 1415.—“When king Henrie had fullie furnished his navie with men, munition, and other provisions, perceiving that his capitaines misliked nothing so much as delaie, determined his soldiars to go a shipboard and awaie. But see the hap, the night before the daie appointed for their departure, he was crediblie informed, that Richard earle of Cambridge, brother to Edward duke of York, and Henrie lord Scroope of Masham, lord treasuror, with Thomas Graie, a knight of Northumberland, being confederat together, had conspired his death; wherefore he caused them to be apprehended. The said lord Scroope was in such favour with the king, that he admitted him sometime to be his bed-fellow, in whose fidelitie the king reposed such trust, that when anie privat or publike counsell was in hand, this lord had much in the determination of it. For he represented so great gravitie in his countenance, such modestie in behaviour, and so vertuous zeale to all godlinesse in his talke, that whatsoever he said was thought for the most part necessarie to be done and followed. Also the said sir Thomas Greie (as some write) was of the kings privie counsell.

These prisoners upon their examination, confessed, that for a great summe of monie which they had received of the French king, they intended verelie either to have delivered the king alive into the hands of his enemies, or else to have murthered him before he should have arrived in the duchie of Normandie. When king Henrie had heard all things opened, which he desired to know, he caused all his nobilitie to come before his presence, before whom he caused to be brought the offenders also, and to them said. Having thus conspired the death and destruction of me, which am the head of the realme and governour of the people, it maie be (no doubt) but that you likewise have sworne the confusion of all that are here with me, and also the desolation of your owne countrie. To what horror (O Lord) for any true English hart to consider, that such an execrable iniquitie should ever so bewrap you, as for pleasing of a forren enimie to imbrue your hands in your bloud, and to ruine your owne native soile. Revenge herein touching my person, though I seike not; yet for the safegard of you, my deere freends, and for due preservation of all sorts, I am by office to cause example to be shewed. Get ye hence, therefore, ye poore miserable wretches, to the receiving of your just reward, wherein Gods majestie give you grace of his mercie and repentance of your heinous offenses. And so immediate lie they were had to execution. . . . Diverse write that Richard earle of Cambridge did not conspire with the lord Scroope and Thomas Graie for the murthering of king Henrie to please the French king withall, but onelie to the intent to exalt to the crowne his brother in law Edmund earle of March as heire to Lionell duke of Clarence: after the death of which earle of March, . . . the earle of Cambridge was sure that the crowne should come to him by his wife, and to his children, of his be gotten. And therefore (as was thought) he rather confessed himselfe for need of monie to be corrupted by the French king, than he would declare his inward mind, and open his verie intent and secret purpose.

"But now to proceed with king Henries dooings. After this, when the wind came about prosperous to his purpose, he caused the mariners to weie up anchors, and hoise up sailes, and to set forward with a thousand ships, on the vigil of our ladie daie the Assumption, and toke land at Caur, commonlie called Kideaux, where the river Saine runneth into the sea, without resistence. ... The French king being advertised that king Henrie was arrived on that coast, sent in all haste the lord de la Breth constable of France, the seneshall of France, the seneshall of Henault, the lord Lignie, with other, which fortified townes with men, victuals, and artillerie, on all those frontiers towards the sea. And hearing that Harfle was besieged, they came to the castell of Caudebecke, being not farre from Harfle, to the intent they might succour their frends which were besieged, by some policie or meanes; but the Englishmen, notwithstanding all the damage that the Frenchmen could worke against them, foraid the countrie, spoiled the villages, bringing manie a rich prcie to the campe before Harfle. And dailie was the towne assaulted; for the duke of Glocest-ter, to whom the order of the siege was committed, made three mines under the ground, and approching to the wals with his engins and ordinance, would not suffer them within to take anie rest. For although they with their countermining somewhat disappointed the Englishmen, and came to fight with them hand to hand within the mines, so that they went no further forward with that worke; yet they were so inclosed on ech side, as well by water as land, that succour they saw could none come to them. ...

"The capitains within the towne, perceiving that they were not able long to resist the continuall assaults of the Englishmen, knowing that their wals were undermined, and like to be overthrowne (as one of their bulwarks was alredie, where the earles of Huntington and Kent had set up their banners) sent an officer at armes forth about midnight after the feast daie of saint Lambert, which fell that yeare upon the tuesdaie, to beseech the king of England to appoint some certeine persons as commissioners from him, with whom they within might treat about some agreement. The duke of Clarence, to whom this messenger first declared his errand, advertised the king of their request, who granting thereto, appointed the duke of Excester with the lord Fitz Hugh, and sir Thomas Erpingham, to understand their minds, who at the first requested a truce untill sundaie next following the feast of saint Michael, in which meane time, if no succour came to remooe the siege, they would undertake to deliver the towne into the kings hands, their lives and goods saved. The king advertised hereof, sent them word, that except they would surrender the towne to him the morow next insuing, without anie condition, they should spend no more in talke about the matter. ...

"The king, nevertheless was after content to grant a respit upon certeine conditions, that the capitains within might have time to send to the French king for succour (as before ye have heard) lest he intending, greater exploits, might lose time in such small matters. When this composition was agreed upon, the lord Bacqueville was sent unto the French king, to declare in what point the towne stood. To whome the Dolphin answered, that the kings power was not yet assembled in such number as was convenient to raise so great a siege. This answer being brought unto the capteins within the towne, they rendered it up to the king of England, after that the third daie was expired. . . . All this done, the king ordaine capteine to the towne his uncle the Duke of Excester, who established his lieutenant there, one sir John Fastolfe, with fifteene hundred men, or (as some have) two thousand and thirtie six knights, whereof the baron of Carew, and sir Hugh Lutterell, were two councellors . . .

"King Henree, after the winning of Harfle, determined to have proceeded further in the winning of other townes and fortresses; but because the dead time of the winter approched, it was determined by advise of his councell, that he should in all convenient speed set forward, and march through the cuntreie towards Calis by land, least his returne as then homewards should of slanderous toongs be named a running awaie; and yet that journie was adjudged perillous, by reason that the number of his people was much minished by the flix and other fevers, which sore vexed and brought to death above fifteene hundred persons of the armie; and this was the cause that his returne was the sooner appointed and concluded. . . .

"At length the king approched the river of Some, and finding all the bridges broken, he came to the passage of Blanchetake, where his great grandfather king Edward the third a little before had stricken the battell of Cressie; but the passage was now so impeached with stakes in the botome of the foord, that he could not passe, his enemies besides there awaie so swarming on all sides. He therefore marched forwards to Arames, marching with his armie, and passing with his carriage in so martial a maner, that he appeared so terrible to his enemies, as they durst not offer him battell. And yet the lord Dalbretch constable of France, the marshall Bouncenall, the earl of Vendsme great master of France, the duke of Alanson, and the earle of Richmont, with all the puissance of the Dolphin laie at Abuile, but ever kept the passages, and coasted aloofe, like a hauke though eager yet not hardie on her preie.
The king of England kept on his journie till he came to the bridge of saint Maxence, where he found above thirtie thousand Frenchmen, and there pitched his field, looking suerlie to be fought withall. . . .

"The king the same daie found a shallow, between Corbie and Peron, which never was espied before, at which he with his army and carriages the night insuing, passed the water of Some without let or danger, and therewith determined to make haste towards Calis, and not to seeke for battell, except he were thereto constreined, because that his armie by sicknesse was sore diminished, in so much that he had but onelie two thousand horsemen, and thirteen thousande archers, bilmen, and of all sorts of other footmen.

"The Englishmen were brought into some distresse in this journie, by reason of their vittels in maner spent, and no hope to get more; for the enimies had destroyed all the corne before they came. Rest could they none take, for their enemies with alarms did ever so infest them; dailie it rained, and nightlie it fresseed; or fuell there was great scarsitie, of fluxes plentie; monie inough, but wares for their releefe to bestow it on, had they none. Yet in this great necessitie, the poor people of the countrie were not spoilt, nor anie thing taken of them without payment, nor anie outrage or offense done by the Englishmen, except one, which was, that a souldiour tooke a pix out of a church, for which he was appreheended, and the king not once remooved till the box was restored, and the offendour strangled. The people of the countreys thereabout, hearing of such zeale in him to the maintenance of justice, ministred to his armie victuals, and other necessaries, although by open proclamation so to doo they were prohibited.

"The French king being at Rone, and hearing that king Henrie was passed the river of Some, was much displeased therewith, and assembling his counsell, to the number of five and thirtie, asked their advise what was to be done. There was amongst these five and thirtie, his sonne the Dolphin, calling himselfe king of Sicill; the dukes of Berrie and Britaine, the earl of Pontieu the kings youngest sonne, and other high estates. At length thirtie of them agreed that the Englishmen should not depart unfought withall, and five were of a contrarie opinion, but the greater number ruled the matter; and so Montjoy king at armes was sent to the king of England to defie him as the enimie of France, and to tell him that he should shortlie have battell. King Henrie advisedlie answered: Mine intent is to doo as it pleaseth God, I will not seeke your maister at this time; but if he or his seek me, I will meet with them God willing. If anie of your nation attempt once to stop me in my journe now towards Calis, at their jeopardy be it; and yet wish I not anie of you so unadvised, as to be the occasion that I die your tawnie ground with your red bloud. When he had thus answered the herald, he gave him a princelie reward, and licence to depart. Upon whose returne, with this answer, it was incontinentlie on the French side proclaimed, that all men of warre should resort to the constable to fight with the king of England. Whereupon, all men apt for armor and desirous of honour, drewe them toward the field. The Dolphin sore desired to have beene at the battell, but he was prohibited by his father; likewise Philip earle of Charolois would gladlie have beene there, if his father the duke of Burgogne would have suffered him: manie of his men stale awaie, and went to the Frenchmen. The king of England hearing that the Frenchmen approched, and that there was an other river for him to passe with his armie by a bridge, and doubting least if the same bridge should be broken, it would be greatlie to his hinderance, appointed certaine capteins with their bands, to go thither with all speed before him, and to take possession thereof, and so to keepe it, till his coming thither. . . .

"The cheefe leaders of the French host were these: the constable of France, the marshall, the admerall, the lord Rambures maister of the crosbowes, and other of the French nobilitie, which came and pitched downe their standards and banners in the countie of saint Pauke, within the territorie of Agincourt, having in their armie (as some write) to the number of threescore thousand horssemen, besides footmen, wagoners and other. They were lodged even in the wae by the which the Englishmen must needs passe towards Calis, and all that night after their comming thither made great cheare and were verie merie, pleasant, and full of game. The Englishmen also for their parts were of good comfort, and nothing abashed of the matter, and yet they were both hungrie, wearie, sore travelled, and vexed with manie cold diseases. Howbeit, reconciling themselves with God by hoosell and shrift, requiring assistance at his hands that is the onelie gever of victorie, they determined rather to die, than to yeeld, or flee. The daie following was the five and twentieth of October in the year 1415, being then fridaie, and the feast of Crispine and Crispinian, a day faire and fortunate to the English, but most sorrowfull and unluckie to the French. . . . “When he had thus ordered his battels, he left a small companie to keepe his campe and cariage, which remained still in the village, and then calling his capteins and soldiers about him, he made to them a right grave oration, movinge them to plaie the men, whereby to obtenie a glorious victorie, as there was hope certyne they should, the rather if they would but remember the just cause for which they fought, and whome they should encounter, such faint-harted people as their ancestors had so often overcome. To conclude, manie words of courage he uttered, to styrre them to doo manfullie, assuring them that England should never be charged with his ransome, nor anie Frenchman triumph over him as a captive: for either by famous death or glorious victorie would he (by Gods grace) win honour and fame. “It is said that as he heard one of the host utter his wish to another thus: I would to God there were with us now so manie good soldiers as are at this house within England! the king answered: I would not wish a man more here than I have; we are indeed in comparison to the enimes but a few, but if God of his clemencie doo favour us, and our just cause (as I trust he will) we shall speed well onough. But let no man ascribe victorie to our owne strength and might, but onelie to Gods assistance, to whome I have no doubt we shall worthilie have cause to give thanks therefore. And if so be that for our offenses sakes we shall be delivered into the hands of our enimes, the lesse number we be, the lesse damage shall the realme of England sustaine; but if we should fight in trust of multitude of men, and so get the victorie (our minds being prone to pride), we should thereupon peradventure ascribe the victorie not so much to the gift of God, as to our owne puissance, and thereby provoke his high indignation and displeasure against us; and if the enemie get the upper hand, then should our realme and countrie suffer more damage and stand in further danger. But be you of comfort, and show your selues valiant, God and our just quarrell shall defend us, and deliver these our proud adversaries with all the multitude of them which you see, (or at least the most of them), into our hands. . . . The Frenchmen in the mean while, as though they had beene sure of victorie, made great triumph, for the capteins had determined before how to divide the spoile, and the soldiers the night before had plaide the Englishmen at dice. The noble men had devised a chariot, wherein they might triumphantlie conveie the king captive to the citie of Paris, crieng to their soldiers; Haste you to the spoile, glorie, and honor; little weening (God wot) how soone their brags should be blowne aweie.

"Here we maie not forget how the French thus in their jolite, sent a herald to king Henrie, to inquire what ransome he would offer. Whereunto he answered, that within two or three houres he hoped it would so happen, that the Frenchmen should be glad to common rather with the Englishmen for their ransoms, than the English to take thought for their deliverance, promising for his owne part, that his dead carcasse should rather be a prize to the Frenchmen, than his living bodie should pai anie ransome. When the messenger was come backe to the French host, the men of warre put on their helmets, and caused their trumpets to blow to the battell. They thought themselves so sure of victorie, that diverse of the noble men made such hast towards the battell, that they left manie of their servants and men of warre behind them, and some of them would not once staie for their standards; as amongst other the duke of Brabant, when his standard was not come, caused a baner to be taken from a trumpet and fastened to a speare, the which he commanded to be borne before him instead of his standard. . . .

"And so about foure of the clocke in the after noone, the king, when he saw no appearance of enimies, caused the retreat to be blowen; and gathering his armie togethers, gave thanks to almightie God for so happie a victorie, causing his prelats and chapleins to sing this psalm, In eisuti Israel da Aegypto, and commanded everie man to kneele downe on the grounde at this verse: non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam. Which doone, he caused Te Deum, with certeine anthems to be soong, giving laud and praise to God, without boasting of his owne force or anie humane power. That night he and his people toke rest, and refreshed themselves with such victuals as they found in the French campe, but lodged in the same village where he laie the night before.

"In the morning Montjoie king at armes and foure other French herals came to the K. to know the number of prisoners, and to desire buriall for the dead. Before he made them answer (to understand what they would saie) he demanded of them whie they made to him that request, considering that he knew not whether the victorie was his or theirs. When Montjoie by true and just confession had cleared that doubt to the high praise of the king, he desired of Montjoie to understand the name of the castell neere adjoining: when they had told him it was called Agincourt, he said, Then shall this conflict be called the battell of Agincourt.* . . .

"It was no marvell though this battell was lamentable to the French nation, for in it were taken and slaine the flower of all the nobilitie of

* Agincourt, or Azincour, is about twenty miles south of Saint-Omer, a station on the railway from Calais to Paris. Of the "castell neere adjoining" only the foundations now remain. The hottest of the fight raged between Azincour and the neighbouring commune of Trammecour, where a wood still exists corresponding to that in which Henry is said to have posted his archers, who contributed so much to the victory.

The battle-field of Crécy (see ii. 4. 54) is only about twenty miles from that of Agincourt, being some twelve miles from Abbeville, on the route from Boulogne to Paris. The windmill from which Edward III. watched the battle is still standing.
INTRODUCTION.

France. There were taken prisoners, Charles duke of Orleance, nephew to the French king, John duke of Burbon, the lord Bouciqault one of the marshals of France (he after died in England) with a number of other lords, knights, and esquires, at the least fifteen hundred, besides the common people. There were slain in all of the French part to the number of ten thousand men, whereof were princes and noble men bearing baners one hundred twenty and six; to these, of knights, esquires, and gentlemen, so many as made up the number of eight thousand and foure hundred (of the which five hundred were dubbed knights the night before the battell) so as of the meaner sort, not past sixteen hundred. Amongst those of the nobilitie that were slaine, these were the cheepest, Charles lord de la Breth high constable of France, Jaques de Chatillon lord of Dampier admerall of France, the Lord Rambures master of the crossebowes, sir Guischard Dolphin great master of France, John duke of Alanson, Anthonie duke of Brabant brother to the duke of Burgogne, Edward duke of Bar, the earle of Nevers an other brother to the duke of Burgogne, with the erles of Marle, Vaudemont, Grandpree, Roussie, Fauconberge, Fois and Lestrake, beside a great number of lords and barons of name. Of Englishmen, there died at this battell, Edward duke of Yorke, the earle of Suffolke, sir Richard Kikelie, and Davie Gamme esquier, and of all other not above five and twentye persons, as some doo report.

"The king, like a grave and sober personage, and as one remembering from whom all victories are sent, seemed little to regard such vaine pompe and shewes as were in triumphant sort devised for his welcoming home from so prosperous a jouning, in so much that he would not suffer his helmet to be caried with him, whereby might have appeared to the people the blowes and dints that were to be seene in the same; neither would he suffer anie ditties to be made and soong by minstrels of his glorious victorie; for that he would wholie have the praise and thanks alogether given to God."...

A.D. 1420. — "Whilst these victorious exploits were thus happilie atchieved by the Englishmen, and that the king laie still at Rone, in giving thanks to almighty God for the same, there came to him essoones ambassadours from the French king and the duke of Burgogne to moove him to peace. The king minding not to be reputed for a destroier of the coyntrie, which he coveted to preserve, or for a causer of Christian bloud still to be spilt in his quarrell, began so to incline and give ear unto their sute and humble request, that at length (after often sending to and fro) and that the bishop of Arras and other men of honor had beeene with him, and likewise the earle of Warwick, and the bishop of Rochester had beeene with the duke of Burgogne, they both finallie agreed upon certeine articles, so that the French king and his commons would thereto assent. Now was the French king and the queene with their daughter Katharine at Trois in Champaigne governed and ordered by them, which so much favoured the duke of Burgogne, that they would not, for anie earthlie good, once hinder or pull backe one jot of such articles as the same duke should seeke to preferre. And therefore what needeth manie words, a truce tripartite was accorded betwene the two kings and the duke, and their countries, and order taken that the king of England should send in the companie of the duke of Burgognie his ambassadours into Trois in Champaigne, sufficientie authorized to treat and conclude of so great a matter. The king of England, being in good hope that all his affaires should take good successse as he could wish or desire, sent to the duke of Burgognie his uncle, the duke of Excester, the earle of Salisbury, the bishop of Elie, the Lord Fanhope, the lord Fitz Hugh, sir John Robserrt, and sir Philip Hall, with diverse doctors, to the number of five hundred horsse, which in the companie of the duke of Burgognie came to the citie of Trois the eleventh of March. The king, the queene, and the ladie Katharine them received, and hartilie welcomed, shewing great signes and tokens of love and amitie. After a few daies they fell to councell, in which at length it was concluded that king Henrie of England should come to Trois, and marie the ladie Katharine; and the king hir father after his death should make him heire of his realme, crown and dignitie.

"King Henrie being informed by them of that which they had doone, was well content with the agreement, and with all diligence prepared to go unto Trois. . . . The duke of Burgognie accompanied with many noble men, received him two leagues without the towne, and conveyed him to his lodging. All his armie was lodged in small villages thereabout. And after that he had repose himselfe a little, he went to visit the French king, the queene, and the ladie Katharine, whom he found in saint Peters church, where was a verie joyous meeting betwixt them (and this was on the twentith daie of Maie) and there the king of England, and the ladie Katharine were affianced."*

* Saint Peter's Church, or the Cathedral of Troyes, was begun in the early part of the 13th century, the choir being completed about A.D. 1250. The nave was added in the beginning of the 14th century; and the west front, which was never completed, was begun in 1506. The interior has been admirably restored in our day, under the direction of M. Viollet-le-Duc. The windows retain much of their original glass, which is remarkable for its beauty and brilliancy.

The marriage of Henry and Katherine took place on the 2d of June, 1420, not in the cathedral where they had been affianced, but in the Church of Saint John, which was built in the 14th century. It is still standing, though in a comparatively ruinous condition. Within the church is a well which furnishes water to the people of that quarter of the city.
PROLOGUE.—The folio has “Enter Prologue;” but see line 32: “Admit me Chorus,” etc.

1, 2. Warb. sees here an allusion to the Peripatetic system with its several heavens, “the highest of which was one of fire;” but, as Douce remarks, the poet “simply wishes for poetic fire and a due proportion of inventive genius.”
NOTES.

Invention is metrically a quadrasyllable. Gr. 479.

7. Leash'd in like hounds, etc. Cf. J. C. iii. 1. 273: “let slip the dogs of war;” and 1 Hen. VI. iv. 2. 10:
   “You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
   Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire.”

Holinhed says that Henry V. declared to the people of Rouen “that the goddess of battell, called Bellona, had three handmaidens, ever of necessitie attending upon her, as blood, fire, and famine.”

9. Flat, unraised spirit. “Opposed to the Muse of fire, etc.” (Schmidt). The folio has “spirits.”

12. Vasty. For similar adjectives, see Gr. 450.

   The very casques. The mere casques, even the casques. Cf. T. of S. iv. 3. 32: “the very name of meat;” Rich. III. i. 4. 60: “with the very noise,” etc.

16. Attest. “Serve as a certificate for” (Schmidt); stand for.

18. Imaginary. Imaginative. Gr. 3.

22. Perilous. Steevens would make this an adverb (=very), as in B. and F., Humorous Lieutenant: “She is perilous crafty,” etc.; but it is clearly an adjective. M. Mason cites M. of V. iii. 1. 4: “wracked on the narrow seas—the Goodwins, I think they call the place—a very dangerous flat,” etc.

25. Puissance. Army; as in ii. 2. 190 below. Cf. K. John, iii. 1. 339: “draw our puissance together.” S. makes the word a dissyllable or a trisyllable, as suits the measure. Cf. iii. prol. 21 below, and 2 Hen. IV. ii. 3. 52.

30. Accomplishment. Work, performance; as in R. of L. 716. S. uses the word only twice.

31. The which. See Gr. 270.

Scene I.—The Archbishop of Canterbury was Henry Chicheley, a Carthusian monk, recently promoted to that see; the Bishop of Ely was John Fordham, consecrated in 1388.

It appears from Hall and Holinhed (see p. 132 above) that the business of this scene was transacted at Leicester, where the king held a parliament in the second year of his reign; but the chorus at the beginning of the next act shows that the poet intended to make London the place of his first scene (Malone).

3. Was like. Was likely to pass. For the ellipsis, cf. Gr. 397.

4. Scambling. Scambling. Cf. v. 2. 196 below. See also Much Ado, v. 1. 94 and K. John, iv. 3. 146. Steevens and Halliwell give many examples of the word from writers of the time.

5. Question. Debate, consideration. Cf. ii. 4. 17 below.

ACT I. SCENE I.

28. Consideration, etc. "As paradise, when sin and Adam were driven out by the angel, became the habitation of celestial spirits, so the king's heart, since consideration has driven out his follies, is now the receptacle of wisdom and of virtue" (Johnson).
33. In a flood. Alluding, as Johnson thinks, to the cleansing of the Augean stables by Hercules, who turned a river through them.
34. Currance. Current (compare concurrence, occurrence, etc.). The later folios substitute "current" or "current."
35. Nor never. For the double negative, see Gr. 406.
36. All at once. "And all the rest, and everything else" (Schmidt).
Cf. A. Y. L. iii. 5. 36:

"Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and all at once,
Over the wretched?"

St. says it was a trite phrase in the time of S., and quotes F. Sabie, Fisherman's Tale, 1594: "She wept, she cried, she sob'd, and all at once;" and Middleton, Changeling, iv. 3: "Does love turn fool, run mad, and all at once?"
43. List. For the transitive use, see Gr. 199.
47. Familiar. Used adverbially. Gr. 1. For so omitted before that, see Gr. 283.
48. The air, etc. "This line is exquisitely beautiful" (Johnson).
Malone quotes A. V. L. ii. 7. 48:

"I must have liberty
Withal, as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please."

occurs in A. W. iv. 3. 162 and Oth. i. 1. 24. The meaning of the passage, as Johnson remarks, is "that his theory must have been taught by art and practice; which, says he, is strange, since he could see little of the true art or practice among his loose companions, nor ever retired to digest his practice into theory." On the "redundant object" in 53, see Gr. 414.
55. Companies. Companions. The use of the word here favours Theobald's emendation of M. N. D. i. 1. 219.
57. Never noted. For the ellipsis, see Gr. 403.
59. Popularity. "Vulgar" (Schmidt); "plebeian intercourse"
(Steevens). So in the only other instance in which S. uses the word,
1 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 69: "Enfeoff'd himself to popularity."
60. The strawberry grows, etc. It was a common opinion in the time of S. that plants growing together imbibed each other's qualities. Sweet flowers were planted near fruit-trees with the idea of improving the flavour of the fruit, while ill-smelling plants were carefully cleared away lest the fruit should be tainted by them. But the strawberry was supposed to be an exception to the rule, and not to be corrupted by the "evil communications" of its neighbours. St. Francis de Sales says:
"In tilling our garden we cannot but admire the fresh innocence and purity of the strawberry, because although it creeps along the ground, and is continually crushed by serpents, lizards, and other venomous reptiles, yet it does not imbibe the slightest impression of poison, or the smallest malignant quality—a true sign that it has no affinity with poison;” and again: “In this manner you may remain innocent amidst the hissing of serpents, and, as a little strawberry, you will not suffer contamination from slinky things creeping near you.”

K

63. Contemplation. His serious or thoughtful nature.

66. Crecive in his faculty. “Increasing in its proper power” (Johnson). S. uses cresive nowhere else; but he has crescent in the same sense in Ham. i. 3. 11, A. and C. ii. 1. 10, and Cymb. i. 4. 2. Steevens quotes Drant’s Horace’s Art of Poetry, 1567: “As lusty youths of crescive age doe flourish and grow.” On his = its, see Gr. 228.

73. Swaying, etc. Inclining our way.

76. Upon. Used temporally, or perhaps = in pursuance of the decrees passed there (Schmidt).

81. Withal. See Gr. 196.

86. Several is explained by Abbott (Gr. 433) as “details.” It is opposed to “generals” in T. and C. i. 3. 180: “Severals and generals of grace exact.” In W. T. i. 2. 226 (“some severals Of head-piece extraordinary”) it is = individuals. M. Mason would read “several.” Unhidden = open, clear. “The passages of his titles are the lines of succession by which his claims descend” (Johnson). Schmidt explains unhidden passages doubtfully as “open, manifest traces (?)”

Scene II.—2. Good uncle. “The person here addressed was Thomas Beaufort, Earl of Dorset, who was half-brother to King Henry IV., being one of the sons of John of Gaunt by Katharine Swynford. He was not made Duke of Exeter until after the battle of Agincourt, Nov. 14, 1416” (Malone).

3. Shall we, etc. The quartos begin the play here.

4. Be resolv’d. Be satisfied. Cf. 7. C. iii. 1. 131, iii. 2. 183, iv. 2. 14, etc.

11. The law Salique. See extract from Holinshed, p. 132 above.

15. Or nicely charge, etc. “Take heed, lest by nice and subtle sophistry you burthen your knowing soul, or knowingly burthen your soul, with the guilt of advancing a false title, or of maintaining, by specious fallacies, a claim which, if shown in its native or true colours, would appear to be false” (Johnson). Miscreate = illegitimate. For the form, see Gr. 342; and for with, Gr. 193.

19. Approbation. Proving, establishing. Cf. T. N. iii. 4. 198: “more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him;” Cymb. i. 4. 134: “on the approbation of what I have spoke,” etc.

21. Inputon. Pledge, engage. The meaning appears to be, Take care how you commit us to a policy involving such serious consequences.

27. Wrong gives. The folio has “wrongs gives,” and in the next line “makes.” See Gr. 247.

35. There is no bar, etc. How closely this speech follows Holinshed will be seen by comparing it with the chronicle, pp. 132, 133 above.

40. Gloze. Also spelled glose. It means to explain, though generally
ACT I. SCENE II.

with the added idea of sophistry. Cf. T. and C. ii. 2. 165: "Have gloz'd but superficially;" Rich. II. i. 10: "whom youth and ease have taught to gloze," etc.

46. Charles the great. That is, Charlemagne. Charlemain in 75 is Charles the Bald, who also assumed the title of Magnus, or Great.

57. Four hundred one and twenty years. No commentator has called attention to the error in subtracting 426 from 805, which leaves 379, not 421. S. follows Holinshed, who appears to have taken 405 from 826.

65. Which. See Gr. 265; and for of = from, in 67, Gr. 166.

72. To fine his title. The reading of the quarto of 1608; the folio has "To find his title." Johnson suggested "To line" (that is, to strengthen, as in Macb. i. 3. 112), but afterwards preferred "find" = "to determine in favour of." The Coll. MS. has "found," but Coll. retains fine, as W. does, though both favour line. To fine, as Steevens remarks, is "to make showy or specious." Schmidt prefers find = "to trace out."

74. Convey'd himself as heir. Managed to be considered the heir. Convey often means "to do or manage with secrecy" (Schmidt). See Macb. p. 239, note on Convey your pleasures.

The Lady Lingare. No such person appears in French history. Ritson remarks that "these fictitious persons and pedigrees seem to have been devised by the English heralds, to 'fine a title with some show of truth' which 'in pure truth was corrupt and naught."

77. The tenth. It should be the ninth, as some modern eds. give it; but S. wrote the tenth, copying the error from Holinshed (see p. 133).

82. Lineal of. Directly descended from.

88. King Lewis his. See Gr. 217.

93. Them. For the reflexive use, see Gr. 223.

94. Imbare. The quarto has "imbace;" the folio, "imbarre." Imbare (= lay open, expose to view) was suggested by Warb. and adopted by Theo.; also by Halliwell, D., W., and others. K. and the Camb. editors prefer "imbar" (= bar in, secure).

98. In the book of Numbers. See Numb. xxiv. 8. For the form writ, see Gr. 343.

99. When the man dies. That is, without a son. The reading is that of the folio; the quarto has "the sonne," which is followed by some modern eds.

103. Great-grandsire's. That is, Edward III.

107. Defeat on. Cf. Ham. ii. 2. 597:

"Upon whose property and most dear life
A damn'd defeat was made."

108. Whiles. See Gr. 137. The allusion here is to the battle of Cressy, as described by Holinshed: "The earle of Northampton and others sent to the king, where he stood aloft on a windmill-hill; the king demanded if his sonne were slaine, hurt, or felled to the earth. No, said the knight that brought the message, but he is sore matched. Well, (said the king,) returne to him and them that sent you, and saie to them, that they send no more to me for any adventure that falleth, so long as my son is alive; for I will that this journeyme be his, with the honour thereof. The slaught-ter of the French was great and lamentable at the same battle, fought the 26th August, 1346."

114. Cold for action. Malone explains this "cold for want of action" (Gr. 154). Cf. Macb. i. 5. 37: "dead for breath;" Cymb. iii. 6. 17: "to sink for food." K. says: "The unemployed forces, seeing the work done to their hands, stood laughing by and indifferent for action—unmoved to action."

118. Renowned them. Made them famous. Cf. T. N. iii. 3. 24: "that do renown this city."

119. Runs. S. often uses the singular inflection with two singular nouns as subject. Gr. 336.

126. So hath, etc. The hath is emphatic; "your highness hath indeed what they think and know you have" (Malone).

132. For the measure, see Gr. 463.

137. Lay down our proportions. Assign the proper number of troops. Cf. 304 below, also ii. 4. 45.

139. Advantages. This may mean "opportunities," as J. H. explains it (cf. iii. 6. 112), or "conditions favourable to success," as Schmidt gives it.

140. Marches. Borders, border country. Cf. 3 Hen. VI. ii. 1. 140: "For in the marches here we heard you were."

142. Inland. The quarto has "England," which Coll. quotes in proof that the "copy" for that ed. was obtained by taking notes of the acted play.

"Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels."

See also T. A. iv. 4. 87 and v. 2. 78. The Coll. MS. substitutes "greedy."

150. Brim fulness. Virtually one word (as Schmidt gives it), though the preceding words compel us to print it as two.

151. Gleaned. Exhausted, laid bare (Schmidt), or "drained of soldiers" (J. H.). Assays = attacks, incursions.

153. That. So that. See on i. 1. 47 above.

154. At the ill neighbourhood. The folio reading; the quarto has "at the bruit thereof." For shook, see Gr. 343.

155. Fear'd. Frightened. Cf. M. of V. ii. 1. 9:

"this aspect of mine Hath fear’d the valiant;"

and see note in our ed. p. 137.

162. Fume. The Coll. MS. substitutes “train.”

163. Chronicle. "The similitude between the chronicle and the sea consists only in this, that they are both full, and filled with something valuable" (Johnson). The quarto has "your," the folio "their chronicle;" her is Johnson’s emendation.

165. Sumless. Inestimable. The quarto has "shiplesse treasurie."

See Gr. 446.

166. The folio gives this speech to the Bishop of Ely, but it appears from Holinshed that it belongs to the Earl of Westmoreland. As Warb. remarks, it is absurd to give it to one of the churchmen in confederacy to push on the king to war with France.

173. Tear. The quarto has "spoile," and the folio "tame." The emendation is Rowe's, and is adopted by Coll., Sr., W., the Cambridge editors, Halliwell, and others.

175. Curst. The quarto reading; the folio has "crush'd," which Schmidt explains as "forced, strained." Curst = "perverse, froward" (Walker), or "sharp, bitter" (W.).

176. Safeguard. Also used as a verb in Rich. II. i. 2. 35: "to safeguard thine own life."

177. Pretty. Steevens wished to substitute "petty," but pretty is used colloquially in a diminutive sense (Schmidt). Cf. A. and C. v. 2. 243, etc.

178. While that. On that as "a conjunctional affix," see Gr. 287.

181. Consent. Some editors here and in 206 read "concent" (=harmony); "a needless emendation," as Schmidt calls it.

182. Congreeing. Agreeing. The folio reading; the quarto has "congrueh."

185. Setting endeavour, etc. "The sense is, that all endeavour is to terminate in obedience, to be subordinate to the public good and general design of government" (Johnson).

189. The act of order. Malone explains this as "the law or statute of order;" but it probably means orderly action. Pope changed act to "art," as does the Coll. MS.

190. They have a king, etc. Malone cites a long passage from Lyly's Euphues and his England, which S. may have had in mind. K. remarks: "This is probable; but, nevertheless, the lines before us are a remarkable instance of the power of S. in the improvement of everything he borrowed. It is not only in the poetic elevation of the description that the improvement consists, but in the rejection of whatever is false or redundant." Sorts = different kinds, or degrees.

191. Correct. Set things right. Not elsewhere used absolutely by S.

192. Venture trade. Johnson compares the phrase "hazard battle."

199. Civil. "Well-governed, peaceful" (Schmidt).

202. Sad-eyed. Sober-looking. For sad = grave, serious, see M. N. D. P. 175.

203. Executors. Executioners. For the accent, see Gr. 490. Elsewhere it has the modern accent; as in Rich. II. iii. 2. 148, etc.

212. End. Here the quarto enables us to correct the misprint "And" of the folio.

220. Hardiness. Bravery; as in Cymb. iii. 6. 22:
NOTES.

"Plenty and peace breeds cowards; hardness ever
Of hardness is mother."

S. uses the word only twice.

_Policy_ = "the art of managing public affairs" (Schmidt); as in i. 1. 45 and ii. prol. 14, etc.

221. _Dauphin_. The folio has here, as elsewhere, "Dolphin," which
W. retains.

226. _Empire_. Empire, dominion; as in _T. A._ i. 1. 19, 22, 201. It is used in the concrete sense (= country under a prince) in _Rich. III._ iii. 7, 136 and _Cymb._ i. 6. 120.

233. _Waxen_. The folio reading; the quarto has "paper." Either = "easily effaced" (Schmidt). As Hunter remarks, _worshipp'd_ is used in the sense of _honoured_, and the passage means "a grave without any inscription, not even one of the meanest and most fugitive."

239. _Or shall we_, etc. That is, shall we spare your feelings and state our message indirectly? Cf. _Rich. III._ iii. 5. 93:

"But touch this sparingly, as 't were far off;
Because you know, my lord, my mother lives."

245. _In few_. In few words, in brief. Cf. _Temp._ i. 2. 144; _M. for M._
iii. i. 237; _Ham._ i. 3. 126, etc.

248. For the measure, see Gr. 469.

252. _Galliard_. A lively French dance. Cf. _T. N._ i. 3. 127: "What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?" Sir John Davies, in his _Orchestra_, describes the dance thus:

"But, for more divers and more pleasing show,
A swift and wandering daunce she did invent,
With passages uncertaine, to and fro,
Yet with a certaine answere and consent
To the quicke musicke of the instrument.
Five was the number of the musicks feet,
Which still the daunce did with five paces meet.
A gallant daunce, that lively doth bewray
A spirit, and a vertue masculine.
Impatient that her house on earth should stay,
Since she herselfe is fiery and divine:
Oit doth she make her body upward shine:
With lofty tunes and carpiols in the ayre,
Which with the lusty tunes accordeth faire."

Halliwell quotes _Lanquettes Chronicle_: "About this time [1541] a new trade of daunysng galiardes upon five paces, and vaunting of horses, was brought into the realme by Italiens, which shortly was exercised commonly of all yonge men, and the old facion lefte."

256. _Desires you let_, etc. For the construction, see Gr. 349, 369.

258. _Tennis-balls_. In the old play of _The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth_ (see p. 10) this present consists of a gilded tun of tennis-balls and a carpet. The answer of King Henry there is as follows:

"My lord, prince Dolphin is very pleasant with me.
But tell him, that instead of balls of leather,
We will teaz him balls of brass and of iron:
Yea, such balls as never were toss'd in France.
The proudest tennis-court in France shall rue it."
Cf. Drayton's Battle of Agincourt:

"I'll send him balls and rackets if I live;
That they such racket shall in Paris see,
When over line with bandies I shall drive;
As that, before the set be fully done,
France may perhaps into the hazard run."

261. Rackets. The bat used for striking the ball at tennis. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. ii. 2. 23.

263. Shall strike. For the omission of the relative, see Gr. 244.

266. Chases. According to Douce, "a chace, at tennis, is that spot where a ball falls, beyond which the adversary must strike his ball to gain a point or chace." It seems to have been often used in this latter sense of a point gained in the game. Cf. Sidney's Arcadia, iii.: "Then Fortune (as if she had made chases enow on the one side of that bloody Tennis-court) went on the other side of the line," etc. Halliwell quotes a dialogue from the Marow of the French Tongue, 1625, of which the following is part: "I have thirty, and a chase... And I, I have two chases.
—Sir, the last is no chase, but a losse."

267. Comes o'er us. "Wakes us to sad remembrance" (Schmidt); or, perhaps, simply = reminds us. Cf. Oth. iv. 1. 20: "O, it comes o'er my memory," etc.

269. This poor seat of England. The throne. Cf. i. 1. 88 above: "the crown and seat of France." See also Rich. II. ii. 1. 120, iii. 2. 119, iv. 1. 218, etc.

270. Living hence. Probably = "withdrawing from the court," as Steevens explains it. Cf. i Hen. IV. iii. 2. 32, where the king says to the prince:

"Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied,
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood."

See also Rich. II. v. 3. 1, where Henry IV. asks:

"Can no one tell of my unthrifty son?
'T is full three months since I did see him last."

274. Sail. For the metaphor, cf. Sonn. 86. 1: "Was it the proud full sail of his great verse," etc. The Coll. M.S. substitutes "soul."

276. For that, etc. "To qualify myself for this undertaking, I have descended from my station, and studied the arts of life in a lower character" (Johnson).

282. Gun-stones. Cannon-balls were at first made of stone. Steevens quotes Holinshed: "About seaven of the clocke marched forward the light pieces of ordinance, with stone and powder." In the Brut of England, it is said that Henry "anone lette make tenes balles for the Dolfin in all the haste that they myght, and they were great gonnestones for the Dolfin to playe with alle. But this game at tenes was too rough for the besieged, when Henry playede at the tenes with his hard gonnestones," etc.

300. Happy. Favourable, propitious; as often. Cf. Much Ado, iv. 1. 285; Rich. II. i. 3. 276, etc.

304. Proportions. See on 137 above.

306. Reasonable. The Coll. MS. needlessly substitutes “seasonable.” Steevens quotes T. and C. ii. 2. 44:

"if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels."

307. God before. “God going before” (W.). Abbott (Gr. 203) explains it as a case of the preposition transposed. The expression occurs again iii. 6. 147. Johnson there quotes an old Dialogue between a Herdsman and a Maiden going on a Pilgrimage to Walsingham, in which the herdsman takes his leave in these words: “Now, go thy ways, and God before.”

309. Task his thought. Cf. 6 above: “That task our thoughts,” etc.

SOUTHAMPTON.

ACT II.

PROLOGUE.—3. Thrive. That is, are doing a good business. The Coll. MS. reads “strive.”

6. The mirror, etc. Cf. 1 Hen. VI. i. 4. 74: “mirror of all martial men;” Hen. VIII. ii. 1. 53: “The mirror of all courtesy,” etc.

8. For now sits, etc. Steevens remarks that the idea is taken from the ancient trophies, in which swords were often encircled with naval or mural crowns. For the personification, cf. Milton, P. L. vi. 306:
ACT II. PROLOGUE.

"while Expectation stood In horror."

Henley says that the image is borrowed from a wood-cut in the 1st ed. of Holinshed.

19. Kind. True to their nature or kinship; "not degenerate and corrupt, but such as a thing or person ought to be" (Schmidt); nearly equivalent to natural. Cf. M. for M. iii. 1. 229: "in his love toward her ever most kind and natural."

23. Richard earl of Cambridge. Richard de Coninsbury, younger son of Edmund of Langley, Duke of York. He was father of Richard Duke of York, who was father of Edward IV.

26. The gilt of France. The gold of France; the only instance of this sense in S. Steevens quotes An Alarum for London, 1602:

"To spend the victuals of our citizens,
Which we can scarcely compass now for gilt."

For the play on gilt and guilt, cf. 2 Hen. IV. iv. 5. 129, and see Macb. p. 192.

28. This grace of kings. Used in a complimentary sense, like "mirror of all Christian kings" in 6 above. Steevens quotes Chapman's Homer:

"with her the grace of kings, Wise Ithacus, ascended;"

and again:

"Idæus, guider of the mules, discern'd this grace of men."

31, 32. The folio reads:

"Linger your patience on, and wee 'll digest
Th' abuse of distance: force a play:" etc.

The passage is "evidently corrupt" (Schmidt), and perhaps hopelessly so. Well, suggested by Pope, is generally adopted; and many editors accept his reading of the next line, "The abuse of distance, while we force a play." The Coll. M.S. has "and so force a play." K. believes that the lines were meant to be erased. Steevens explains force a play as "to produce a play by compelling many circumstances into a narrow compass." Force is used by S. in the sense of force (=stuff, as in "force-meat" still) in T. and C. ii. 3. 232 and v. 1. 64.

35. Gentles. Gentlefolk. Compare L. L. L. iv. 2. 172: "the gentles are at their game." It is usually a vocative, as here. Cf. L. L. L. ii. 1. 225; M. N. D. v. 1. 128, 436; M. W. iii. 2. 92, etc.

40. We 'll not offend, etc. "That is, you shall pass the sea without the qualms of sea-sickness" (Johnson).

41. Till the king come, etc. The meaning evidently is that the scene is not to be changed to Southampton until the king makes his appearance; but there seems to be a “confusion of construction.” Cf. Gr. 409–416. Of the emendations suggested, Hanmer’s “But when the king comes forth” is the only one worth mentioning.

Scene I.—2. Lieutenant Bardolph. Some commentators would make Bardolph a “corporal,” and not a “lieutenant;” but, as K. remarks, they overlook the tone of authority which he uses both to Pistol and Nym. It appears from an old MS. in the British Museum, that Wm. Pistail and R. Bardolf were among the cannoniers serving in Normandy in 1435.

3. Ancient. Corrupted from ensign. In 1 Hen. IV. iv. 2. 34 it means the standard.

5. Smiles. Farmer suggested “smites” (also in the Coll. MS.), which W. adopts. Malone says: “Perhaps Nym means only to say, I care not whether we are friends at present; however, when time shall serve, we shall be in good humour with each other: but be it as it may.”

18. Troth-plight. Betrothed. It is also an adjective in W. T. v. 3. 151: “Is troth-plight to your daughter.” In W. T. i. 2. 278 it is a noun.

22. A tired mare. Steevens quotes Pierce’s Supererogation: “Silence is a slave in a chain, and patience the common pack-horse of the world.”

33. Drawn. The folio has “hewn.” Theo. suggested drawn, which is adopted by the Camb. editors, D., W., and others. Halliwell retains hewn, which some explain as = drunk. Lady refers to the Virgin Mary.

39. Iceland. The folio has “Island,” the quarto “Iceland.” Steevens quotes Ram-Alley, 1611: “A baboon, a parrot, and an Izeland dog;” and Two Wise Men, etc., 1619: “these Iceland dogs.” Halliwell says that Fleming in his English Dogs, 1576, mentions “Izeland dogges, curled and rough all over.”

42. Shog. “Nym’s word for jog” (Schmidt). Halliwell quotes examples of it from B. and F., and other writers of the time. Solus is of course the Latin for alone.

44. Mervailous. The folio reading, probably = “marvellous,” which many eds. substitute for it. Schmidt calls it “an unintelligible word.”

46. Perdy. A corruption of par Dieu. Cf. C. of E. iv. 4. 74; Ham. iii. 2. 305, etc.

49. I can take. The quarto has “talk,” which Malone prefers. As K. suggests, I can take may mean, as in modern slang, “I understand you; I know what you are about.”

51. Barbason. A demon; also mentioned in M. W. ii. 2. 311. “The unmeaning tumour of Pistol’s speech very naturally reminds Nym of the sounding nonsense uttered by conjurers” (Steevens).

59. Exhale. The commentators are in doubt whether this means “draw your sword” or “die.” Either makes sense—if it be necessary to make Pistol speak sense.

68. Couple a gorge! The folio reading, which some editors think it necessary to change to good French, “Coupe la gorge;” though, as we see in iv. 4, Pistol has but a poor smattering of that language.

70. Hound of Crete. Malone thinks that here is an insinuation that
ACT II. SCENE II.

Nym "thirsted for blood," as the Cretan hounds "appear to have been bloodhounds;" but as Steevens sagely remarks, "Pistol on the present, as on many other occasions, makes use of words to which he had no determinate meaning."

71. Spital. Hospital; as in the London Spitalfields. It occurs again in v. 1. 73. Powdering tub refers to the treatment of certain diseases by sweating in a heated tub.

73. The lazar kite, etc. Steevens quotes Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew of Bathe, 1587: "Nor seldom seene in kites of Cressid's kind;" and Greene, Card of Fancy, 1601: "What courtesy is to be found in such kites of Cressid's kind?" In The Forrest of Fancy, 1579, we find "any catte of Cressid's kind."

95. Compound. Agree, come to terms. Cf. iv. 3. 80 and iv. 6. 33 below.

116. Quotidian tertian. The dame jumbles together the quotidian fever, the paroxysms of which recurred daily, and the tertian, in which the period was three days.

124. Lambkins. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. v. 3. 121: "thy tender lambkin now is king." The folio has "for (Lambekins) we will liue;" and some modern eds. give "for, lambkins, we," etc. Condole is used by S. only here and in Bottom's blundering talk in M. N. D. i. 2. 29, 43.

SCENE II.—I. Fore. Usually printed "fore" in the modern eds. We follow the early eds. and Schmidt in giving it fore. It occurs often in S.

2. By and by. Presently, soon; as often in S. Cf. V. and A. 347:

"But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky;"

T. G. of V. i. 3. 85:

"The uncertain glory of an April day,
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away."

Ham. iii. 2. 391:

"Polonius. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Hamlet. Then I will come to my mother by and by," etc.

See also Matt. xiii. 21 and Luke, xxi. 9.

8. His bedfellow. S. here follows Holinshed (see p. 135 above). Steevens quotes A Knack to Know a Knave, 1594: "Yet, for thou wast once bedfellow to a king," etc. Bedfellow was common as a familiar appellation among the nobility in olden time.

15. Forces. S. uses both the singular and the plural in this sense. See f. C. p. 168, note on Are leaying powers.

23. Nor leave not. See Gr. 406.

31. Create. For the form, see Gr. 342. Cf. miscreate, i. 2. 16.

33. Shall forget, etc. Perhaps S. had in mind Psalms, cxxxvii. 5 (Steevens).

43. His more advice. "His return to more coolness of mind" (Johnson). The Coll. MS. has "our" for his, but no change is called for. Cf. M. of V. iv. 2. 6: "upon more advice" (that is, upon reflection); M. for M. v. 1. 469: "after more advice," etc. Gr. 17.

44. Security. Carelessness, confidence. Cf. J. C. ii. 3. 8: "security gives way to conspiracy;" Macb. iii. 5. 32: "security Is mortals' chiefest enemy," etc.

46. By his sufferance. By tolerating him. Cf. Cor. iii. i. 24: "Against all noble sufferance," etc.

53. Heavy orisons. Weighty petitions. Cf. Cymb. i. 3. 32: "to encounter me with orisons," etc.

54. Proceeding on distemper. "Committed in the state of drunkenness" (Schmidt). Cf. Gr. 180. Distemper often means mental derangement or excitement—in this case, due to intoxication. Cf. Oth. i. 1. 99: "Full of supper and distempering draughts." Steevens quotes Holinshed: "gave him wine and strong drink in such excessive sort, that he was therewith disturbed and reeled as he went."

55. How shall we, etc. "If we may not wink at small faults, how wide must we open our eyes at great?" (Johnson).

61. Late. Lately appointed; as in ii. 4. 31 below it means lately sent. The Coll. MS. substitutes "state."

74. Paper. That is, white as paper. Cf. Macb. v. 3. 16: "those linen cheeks of thine."

75. Cowarded. Not elsewhere used by S. as a verb. Gr. 290.

79. Quick. Living. Cf. Ham. v. i. 137: "it is for the dead, not for the quick," etc. See also Acts, x. 42; 2 Tim. iv. 1; Heb. iv. 12, etc.

87. Appertinent. Used by S. as a noun only here. We have the adjective in L. L. L. i. 2. 17 and 2 Hen. IV. i. 2. 194.

95. Ingrateful. Used by S. oftener than ungrateful. Gr. 442.

98. Coin'd me into gold. Cf. J. C. iv. 3. 72:

"By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas," etc.

103. Stands off, etc. Stands out as distinctly, etc.

106. Either's. Each other's. Cf. Temp. i. 2. 450: "They are both in either's powers," etc.

107. Grossly. "Palpably; with a plain and visible connection of cause and effect" (Johnson). For cause the Coll. MS. has "course."

108. That admiration, etc. That they excited no exclamation of surprise. Boswell quotes A. Y. L. iii. 2. 203: "wonderful, and after that, out of all whooping!"

118. Temper'd. Fashioned, moulded. Cf. T. G. of V. iii. 2. 64, etc.

123. Vasty Tartar. On vasty, cf. i. prol. 12 and ii. 4. 105; and on Tartar=Tartarus, T. N. ii. 5. 225 and C. of E. iv. 2. 32.

consequences of breach of trust is the diminution of that confidence which makes the happiness of life, and the dissemination of suspicion, which is the poison of society” (Johnson).

Show. Appear. Cf. V. and A. 366; R. of L. 252, 395; M. of V. ii. 2. 193, iv. 1. 196, etc.

134. In modest complement. “That is, in a corresponding outward appearance” (Schmidt). St. makes complement = “accomplishments, perfection, completeness; applied sometimes to mental, sometimes to physical attainments, and occasionally, as here, merely to the taste and elegance displayed in dress.” He quotes a note of Drayton’s upon the Epistle from Geraldine to Lord Surrey: “but Apparell and the outward Appearance intituled Complement.” The modern distinction of complement and compliment is not found in the early eds. of S., the former being the only orthography.

135. Not working, etc. Not trusting the air or look of any man till he had tried him by enquiry and conversation (Johnson).

136. And but in purged judgment, etc. And trusting neither eye nor ear except after careful scrutiny of the reasons for doing so.

139. To mark, etc. The folio has “To make.” The emendation is due to Theo.

Full-fraught and best indued = most gifted and most richly endowed.

Gr. 398. For the thought, cf. Cymb. iii. 4. 63:

“so thou, Posthumus,
Wilt lay the leaven on all proper men;
Goodly and gallant shall be false and perjur’d
From thy great fall.”

147. Henry. The quarto reading; the folio has “Thomas,” which is wrong.

159. Which. As to which. Gr. 272. Sufferance = suffering; or “death by execution” (Schmidt).

165. My fault, etc. Reed quotes the words of Parry, a conspirator against Queen Elizabeth: “Discharge me a culpa, but not a pena, good ladie.”

169. Earnest. Earnest money; “a part paid beforehand as a pledge” (Schmidt). Cf. W. T. iv. 4. 659: “Indeed, I have had earnest; but I cannot with conscience take it,” etc.

175. Tender. Cherish, take care of. Cf. Rich. II. i. i. 32: “Tendering the precious safety of my prince,” etc.

176. You have sought. The quarto reading; the 1st folio omits have, and the later folios have “you three sought.”

190. Puissance. See on i. proli. 25.

NOTES.

Scene III.—I. Honey-sweet. Cf. T. and C. iii. i. 71: "honey-sweet lord;" Id. iii. i. 154: "honey-sweet queen."

Bring thee = accompany thee. Cf. W. T. iv. 3. 122: "Shall I bring thee on the way?" See also Gen. xviii. 16; Acts, xxii. 5; 2 Cor. i. 16, etc.

8. Arthur's bosom. Mrs. Quickly is not strong on Scripture.

9. Finer. Johnson thought this a blunder for final, but it is more likely = fine, as Malone and Schmidt make it.

10. Chrysom. A blunder for chrisom. The chrisom was the white vesture put upon the child after baptism, and worn until the mother came to be churched. Blount, in his Glossography, 1678, says that chrisoms in the bills of mortality are such children as die within the month of birth, because during that time they were to wear the chrisom cloth.

12. The turning o' the tide. Alluding to the old notion that nobody dies except at the ebb of the tide.

15. A babble of green fields. The folio has "a Table of greene fields." The emendation is Theobald's, and is generally adopted. W. calls it "the most felicitous conjectural emendation ever made of Shakespeare's text." It is sustained by the preceding "play with flowers." Various other corrections have been suggested, but they are hardly worth mentioning.

19. A should not think of God. Malone suggests that S. may have been indebted to the following story in Wits, Fits, and Fancies, 1595: "A gentlewoman fearing to be drowned, said, now Jesu receive our soules! Soft, mistress, answered the waterman; I trow, we are not come to that passe yet."

23. Upward and upward. W. prints "up'ard, and up'ard," and says, "Thus the original, very characteristically." But the folio has "vpe-pee'rd, and vpward;" and the quarto, "vpward, and vpward."

25. Of sack. For of = about, concerning, see Gr. 174.

30. Carnation. Mrs. Quickly confounds incarnate and carnation; but the former was sometimes used for the latter. Henderson quotes Questions of Love, 1566: "Yelowe, pale, redde, blue, whyte, graye, and incarnate;" and Reed adds from the Inventory of the Furniture to be provided for the Reception of the Royal Family, at the Restoration, 1660: "the rich incarnate velvet bed;" and again: "his majesty's incarnate velvet bed."

41. Pitch and pay. A proverbial expression of the time. Steevens quotes several examples of it; as from Blurt Master Constable, 1602: "will you pitch and pay, or will your worship run?" Farmer adds from Florio: "Pitch and pate, and go your waie."
ACT II. SCENE IV.

44. Hold-fast, etc. Alluding to the old proverb, "Brag is a good dog, but hold-fast is a better" (Douce).
45. Cæuto. Take care, be cautious. The quartos has "cophetua."
46. Clear thy crystals. Dry thine eyes; though Johnson thought it might better mean "wash thy glasses."

SCENE IV.—1. Comes. For the singular form, see Gr. 335.
2. More than carefully. "With more than common care" (Johnson).
5. Make forth. Go forth. Cf. J.C. v. 1. 25: "Make forth; the generals would have some words," etc.
7. Line. Strengthen, fortify. Cf. Macb. i. 3. 112: "did line the rebel;"
and see note in our ed. p. 164. See also on i. 2. 72 above.
and fitting well a sheep," etc.
13. Fatal and neglected. "Fatally neglected, neglected to our destruction" (Schmidt).
device by coldness and delay."
18. Musters. Levies of troops. For the arrangement, cf. M. N. D.
iii. 1. 113, 114; Ham. iii. 1. 151; Macb. i. 3. 60, etc.
20. As were. See Gr. 107.
25. A Whitsun morris-dance. An ancient dance in which the performers were dressed in grotesque costume, with bells, etc. For a full description of it, see Douce's Illustrations of Shakespeare.
26. King'd. Furnished with a king. In Rich. II. v. 5. 36 it is = made a king. Steevens quotes Warner's Albion's England, viii. 42: "and king'd his sister's son."
28. Humorous. Capricious. In J. John, iii. 1. 119 Fortune is called "her humorous ladyship."
31. Question your grace. For the "optative subjunctive," see Gr. 364.
IV. i. 3. 78; Ham. v. 2. 242, etc.
35. Constant. Firm, unshaken; as in ii. 2. 133 above. Cf. J.C. iii. 1.
22: "Cassius, be constant;" Id. iii. 1. 60: "constant as the northern star," etc.
36. Forespent. Past. In Cymb. ii. 3. 64, it is = previously bestowed; and in II Hen. IV. i. 1. 37, exhausted.
37, 38. Malone compares R. of L. 1807:

"Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece's side,
Seeing such emulation in their woe,
Began to clothe his swoln in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece' wound his folly's show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly-jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words and uttering foolish things.

"But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him disguise,
And arm'd his long-hid wits advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes."
Boswell remarks that the best commentary on the passage will be found in Prince Henry's soliloquy in 1 Hen. IV. i. 2. 219-241.

46. Projection. Projecting, plan, calculation. Cf. Gr. 451. The construction is somewhat confused, but the meaning, as Malone suggests, evidently is, "which proportions of defence, when weakly and niggardly projected, resemble a miser who spoils his coat," etc.

50. Hath been flesh'd. Hath preyed. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. iv. 5. 133:
"the wild dog
Shall fess his tooth on every innocent."

For of him = his, see Gr. 225. Cf. 64 below.

51. Strain. Lineage, race. Cf. F. C. v. 1. 39: "the noblest of thy strain;" T. of A. i. 1. 259:
"The strain of man's bred out Into baboon and monkey."

53. For much, see Gr. 51.
54. Was struck. Schmidt compares Cymb. v. 5. 468: "the stroke of this battle." Steevens quotes the title of one of Sir David Lyndsay's poems: "How king Ninus began the first warres and strake the first battell."

55. Captiv'd. S. does not use the verb elsewhere. Gr. 290.
57. His mountain sire. Theo. would read "mounting" = high-minded, aspiring. The Coll. MS. has "mighty." Steevens quotes Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 4:
"Where stretcht he lay upon the sunny side
Of a great hill, himselfe like a great hill."

As Malone remarks, the repetition of mountain is much in the poet's manner. See Macb. p. 250, note on Stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff.

64. Fate. "Great good fortune ordained by destiny" (Schmidt). Cf. A. and C. iii. 13. 169: "I will oppose his fate."

70. Most spend their mouths. "That is, bark; the sportsman's term." (Johnson). Cf. V. and A. 695: "Then do they spend their mouths."

See also M. N. D. iv. 1. 128 and 1 Hen. VII. ii. 4. 12.

72. Good my sovereign. See Gr. 13.

85. Sinister. For the accent, see Gr. 490. Awkward = "piverse, unbecoming" (Schmidt).

88. Line. Pedigree; as it is called two lines below.

90. Overlook. Look over, read. Cf. Ham. iv. 6. 13: "when thou shalt have overlooked this," etc.

91. Evenly. "In a straight line, directly" (Schmidt). Cf. 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 103: "In a new channel, fair and evenly."

99. Fiery. The folio has "fierce," an easy misprint for "fierie." Walker made the correction, which is adopted by D., W., and others.

101. Will compel. See Gr. 311 and 348.

103. For "to omitted and inserted," see Gr. 350.

105. Vasty. See on ii. 2. 123; and for the use of and, Gr. 95.

113. For us. As for us. Gr. 149.

124. Womby. See Gr. 450.

125. Chide your trespass. That is, sound it abroad, proclaim it aloud.
ACT III. PROLOGUE.

Cf. Temp. iii. 3. 99: “it did bass my trespass.” For chiding = resounding, cf. Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 197: “the chiding flood.” See also 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 45: “the sea That chides the banks of England,” etc.

126. Ordinance. Ordinance. Cf. K. John, ii. 1. 218, and see extract from Holinshed, p. 136 above. In iii. prol. 26, where the word is a dissyllable, the folio has “Ordenance;” so “Ordinance” in Ham. v. 2. 281. But we find “Ordinance” in T. of S. i. 2. 204 and 1 Hen. VI. i. 4. 15.

132. Louvre. According to some writers the ancient palace of the Louvre was built in the 7th century. What is now called the “Old Louvre” was begun in 1528 under Francis I, and completed by Henry II in 1548.

137. Masters. Possesses. Cf. Sonn. 106. 8: “Even such a beauty as you master now;” M. of V. v. 1. 174: “the wealth That the world masters,” etc.

143. Footed. Landed. Cf. Lear, iii. 3. 14 and iii. 7. 45.

Heights between Havre and Harfleur.

ACT III.

PROLOGUE.—With imagin’d wing. With the speed of imagination.
Cf. M. of V. iii. 4. 52: “with imagin’d speed.”
4. Well appointed. Well furnished, well equipped. Cf. 1 Hen. IV. i. 190, iv. i. 25, etc.

Hampton pie. The folio has “Douer peer,” which is an obvious error. See ii. pro. 30, 34, 42.
5. His royalty. His majesty. Cf. L. L. L. v. 2. 670; W. T. i. 2. 15; K. John, v. 2. 129, etc.
6. Fanning. The folio has “fayning;” corrected by Rowe. Cf. Macb. i. 2. 49:

“Where the Norwegian banners flout the sky
And fan our people cold.”

“The which Pactolus with his waters shere Throwes forth upon the rivage round about him nere.”

17. Harfleur. The folio has here, as elsewhere, “Harflew.”
18. Sternage. “Stern, steerage” (Schmidt). Holinshed has the verb stern = steer; and Chapman the noun = rudder. See Wb.
21. Puissence. For the pronunciation, see on i. pro. 25. On pith = strength, cf. Oth. i. 3. 83 and Ham. iii. 1. 86.
30. To dowry. On to=for, see Gr. 189.
33. Linstock. “The staff to which the match is fixed when the ordnance is fired” (Johnson). In the stage-direction that follows, chambers = small cannon. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 57: “the charged chambers.” See Hen. VIII. p. 9. On devilish cannon, cf. Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 13: “that divelish yron Engin.”
35. Eke. In the folio “eech.” In M. of V. iii. 2. 23, we have “ich.” In Per. iii. pro. 13, it rhymes with speech. W. believes, however, that in this case speech was pronounced like speak, and not eke like each.

Scene I.—7. Summon. Rowe’s correction of the “commune” of the early eds.
9. Aspect. For the accent, see Gr. 490.
14. Swill’d with. Swallowed by. S. uses swill only here and in Rich. III. v. 2. 9:

“The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil’d your summer fields and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood;” etc.

On ocean, see Gr. 479.
15. Now sit the teeth. Cf. Cor. i. 3. 70 and A. and C. iii. 13. 181.
16. Bend up, etc. "A metaphor from the bow" (Johnson). Cf. Macb. i. 7. 79.
17. Noble. The 1st folio has "noblis;" the later folios "noblest," which some modern eds. adopt. K. has "nobless."
18. Fet. Fetched. Cf. Spenser, F. Q. v. 3. i1: "soone the prisoner fet." The 1st folio has "fet" in Rich. III. ii. 2. 121. "Deep-fet" occurs in 2 Hen. VI. ii. 4. 33, and "far-fet" in Id. iii. 1. 293.
31. Slips. Nooses in which the dogs were held until started for the game. Cf. Gascoigne, Absent Lady's Complaint:

"The greyhound is aggreev'd, although he see his game,
If still in slippe he must be stayde, when he would chase the same."

To let slip was to loose the hound from the slip. Cf. 1 Hen. IV. i. 3. 278:
"Before the game's afooth thou still let'st slip." See also Cor. i. 6. 39 and 7. C. iii. 1. 273.

4. Plain-song. In music "the simple melody, without any variations." Cf. M. N. D. i. 1. 134 and Hen. VIII. i. 3. 45.
18. Preach. The folio has "breach" here, and elsewhere it is not uniform in marking the peculiarities of Fluellen's pronunciation. None of the modern editors have made this perfectly consistent throughout, and we have not attempted to do it. Capell remarks: "The poet thought it sufficient to mark his [Fluellen's] diction a little, and in some places only; and the man of taste will be of the same opinion."
22. Bawcock. "A term of endearment, synonymous to chuck, but always masculine" (Schmidt). Cf. iv. 1. 44 below; also T. N. iii. 4. 125 and W. T. i. 2. 121.
25. Swashers. Braggarts, bullies. Used by S. nowhere else; but we have swashing = swaggering, in A. Y. L. i. 3. 122 and R. and F. i. 1. 70.
28. Antics. Buffoons, fools. See Rich. II. iii. 2. 162; T. and C. v. 3. 86, etc.
38. Call it purchase. "This was the cant term for money gained by cheating, as we learn from Greene's Art of Con icyatching" (Boswell).
42. To carry coals meant "to endure affronts" (Johnson). Cf. R. and F. i. 1. 1: "we'll not carry coals." Nares says that the phrase arose from the fact that the carriers of wood and coals were esteemed the very lowest of menials, the servi servorum.
43. Handkerchers. The folio has "Handkerchers," here, as in sundry other places; but "Handkerchiefe" in Oth. iv. 1. 10, 18, 22, etc.
NOTES.

49. Flwelen. An approximation to the Welsh pronunciation of Llewellyn.

56. Flow up. That is, blow up.

76. God-den. Good evening; as in K. John, i. 1. 185; Cor. ii. 1. 103, etc. Cf. Macb. p. 175, note on God'ield. Pioners in 78=pioneers.

93. Quit you. Requite you, answer you; or, perhaps, “tell you also interesting things” (Schmidt). Cf. Rich. II. v. 1. 43:

“to quit their grief,
Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,” etc.

103. By the mess. That is, by the mass.

110. Of my nation, etc. The folio gives the passage thus: “Of my Nation? What ish my Nation? Ish a Villaine, and a Basterd, and a Knaue, and a Rascal. What ish my Nation? Who talkes of my Nation?” K. suggested that there had been an accidental transposition of the type here, and corrected it as in the text. The change, as W. remarks, is supported by the fact that while the other clauses are marked as interrogations, the transposed clause has a period after it. St. thinks, however, that “the incoherence of the original was designed to mark the impetuosity of the speaker.”

5. On the measure, see Gr. 503.

10. The gates of mercy. Cf. 3 Hen. VI. i. 4. 177: “Open thy gate of mercy, gracious Lord!” As Steevens notes, Gray has borrowed the expression in his Elegy, 68: “And shut the gates of mercy on mankind.”

14. Fresh-fair. On “compound adjectives,” see Gr. 2. In this case the hyphen is not in the folio, and might perhaps as well be omitted.

17,18. All fell feats, etc. “All the savage practices naturally concomitant to the sack of cities” (Johnson).

24. Bootless. Used adverbially; as in M. N. D. ii. 1. 37, F. C. iii. 1. 75, etc.

26. Precepts. For the accent, see Gr. 490. According to Schmidt, the accent is on the first syllable when the word means “instruction, lesson;” on the second when it means “mandate, summons.” This is the only case in which the latter sense occurs in verse. We have it in prose in 2 Hen. IV. v. 1. 14.

28. Take pity of. For the preposition, see Gr. 174; and cf. 45 below.

29. While’s. See Gr. 137.

32. Heady. “Impetuous, precipitate” (Schmidt). Cf. i. 1. 34 above; also 1 Hen. IV. ii. 3. 58 and Lear, ii. 4. 111. The 1st sc.io has “headly” here; the later folios, “headdy” or “heady.” Malone suggested “deadly,” which W. adopts.
ACT III. SCENES IV. AND V.

35. Defile. Rowe's emendation for the "Desire" of the folio. It is also found in the Coll. MS.

Judea. Cf. Rich. II. ii. 1. 55, etc. See also John, vii. 1.

42. In defence. That is, in keeping up your resistance.

46. Returns us. Sends us back word. Cf. Rich. II. iii. 3. 121: "say thus the king returns," etc. For powers = forces, cf. ii. 2. 15 above.

44. For. See Gr. 149.

56. Addrest. Prepared, ready. Cf. J. C. iii. 1. 29: "He is address'd," and see note in our ed. p. 156. Steevens quotes Heywood, Brazen Age, 1613: "these champions are address for war."

SCENE IV.—Warb. considered this scene "ridiculous," and Hanmer rejected it. Johnson says: "The scene is indeed mean enough when it is read; but the grimaces of two French women, and the odd accent with which they uttered the English, made it divert on the stage. It may be observed that there is in it not only the French language, but the French spirit. Alice compliments the princess upon her knowledge of four words, and tells her that she pronounces like the English themselves. The princess suspects no deficiency in her instructress, nor the instructress in herself. Throughout the whole scene there may be found French servility and French vanity." W. remarks: "Shakespeare sought to enliven his History by humour; and his intention here was to excite mirth by the exhibition of a Frenchwoman in the ridiculous emergency of sudden preparation for amorous conquest of an Englishman. This could best be done by making her attempt to learn his language, in doing which she must of course speak French; and Shakespeare here, as in the subsequent scene between Pistol and the French soldier, instinctively preserved dramatic propriety at the expense of the mere verbal consistency of his work. That the scene is Shakespeare's the promise in the epilogue to 2 Hen. IV., that in the continuation of the story the audience shall be made 'merry with fair Katherine of France,' is sufficient evidence, as Tyrwhitt remarked. Shakespeare's design was known to the writer of that epilogue."

The French is very blunderingly printed in the quarto, but is quite correct in the folio.

SCENE V.—I. The folio has here the stage-direction, "Enter the King of France, the Dolphin, the Constable of France, and others." The speeches beginning with lines 10 and 30 it prefixes "Brit." But the Duke of "Britaine" does not appear elsewhere in the play, and the editors generally follow Theo. in substituting Bourbon. The stage-direction in the quarto is "Enter King of France Lord Constable, the Dolphin, and Bourbon" (given incorrectly in the notes of the Camb. ed.); and "Bur." is prefixed to the first of these speeches, the second being omitted in the quarto. The Camb. ed. remarks: "In Holinshed (p. 1077, ed. 1577), the Dukes of Berry and Britaine are mentioned as belonging to the French king's council, and not the Duke of Bourbon. Shakespeare probably first intended to introduce the Duke of Britaine, and then changed his mind, but forgot to substitute Bour. for Brit. before the two speeches."
NOTES.

6. Luxury. Lust; the only meaning of the word in S. Cf. M. W. v. 5. 98; Hum. i. 5. 83, etc.
7. Savage. Uncultivated (Johnson).
9. Overlook. Look down on, tower above. For a different sense, see ii. 4. 90 above.
13. Sloberly. "Wet and foul" (Schmidt). S. uses the word only here; but we find the verb slubber in Oth. i. 3. 227 and M. of V. ii. 8. 39, and beslubber in 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 341.
14. Nook-shotten. Warb. and Schmidt make this = shooting out into capes and necks of land; K. and W. think it more probably means "thrust into a corner apart from the rest of the world"—the "penitus toti divisos orbis Britannios" of Virgil. Halliwell compares "cup-shotten" = full of cups, intoxicated.
19. Sur-rein'd. Over-ridden. S. uses the word only here. Steevens quotes Jack Drum's Entertainment, 1601: "A sur-rein'd jaded wit, but he rubs on." There is an allusion to the custom of giving horses over-ridden or feverish a mash; that is, a mixture of ground malt and hot water.

Barley broth. A contemptuous term for beer.
31. Lavoltas. A kind of dance, in which there was much lofty capering. Cf. T. and C. iv. 4. 88: "Nor heel the high lavolt." It is thus described by Sir John Davies, in his Orchesra:

"Yet is there one the most delightful kind,
A lofty jumping, or a leaping round,
Where arm in arm, two dancers are entwined,
And whirl themselves in strict embracements bound,
And still their feet an anapest do sound:
An anapest is all their musick's song,
Whose first two feet is short, and third is long.

"As the victorious twins of Leda and Jove,
That taught the Spartans dancing on the sands
Of swift Eurotas, dance in heaven above;
Knit and united with eternal hands,
Among the stars their double image stands,
Where both are carried with an equal pace,
Together jumping in their turning race."

The coranto, or correto (from the Italian correre, Latin currere, to run), was also a lively dance. Davies says of it:

"What shall I name those current traverses,
That on a triple dactyl foot do run,
Close by the ground, with sliding passages,
Wherein that dancer greatest praise hath won
Which with best order can all order shun:
For every where he wantonly must range,
And turn and wind with unexpected change."

Cf. A. W. ii. 3. 49: "he's able to lead her a coranto;" T. N. i. 3. 137: "go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto."
33. And that. On that, see Gr. 285.
37. More sharper. See Gr. 11.
38. Delabreth. S. follows Holinshed’s spelling of the name, the modern D’Albret.

43. Foix. Capell’s emendation for the “Loys” of the folio. The latter was not the name of any French family of distinction at that time.

44. Knights. The folio has “kings;” corrected by Theo. Cf. iv. 8. 85 below: “princes, barons, lords, knights, squires.”

45. Quit you. Free or clear yourselves. Cf. ii. 2. 166 above; also 2 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 218, etc.

47. Pennons. Schmidt thinks that the meanings of wing and flag are here combined.

58. For achievement. For the exploit (Schmidt). Malone explains it: “instead of achieving a victory over us;” and Abbott refers to Gr. 148.

SCENE VI.—2. The bridge. The reference here is to an historical fact. After Henry had passed the Somme, the French attempted to break down the only bridge over the Ternois, at Blangy, and thus cut off his passage to Calais; but Henry, learning their design, sent forward troops who put the French to flight, and guarded the bridge until the English had crossed.

11. An auncient. See on ii. 1. 3, and cf. 28, 47, and 50 below. The folio reads “an auncient Lieutenant,” the quarto “an Ensigne.”

24. Buxom. “Lively, fresh, brisk” (Schmidt). S. uses the word only here; unless we are to add Per. prol. 23: “buxom, blithe, and full of face.” Cf. Milton, L’Alc. 24: “buxom, blithe, and de bonair.” Spenser uses it in the sense of yielding, obedient; as in F. Q. i. 11. 37: “the buxome aire;” Id. iii. 2. 23: “Of them that to him buxome are and prone.” For the derivation, see Wb.

26. That goddess blind, etc. Ritson quotes The Spanish Tragedy, 1594: “Fortune is blind—Whose foot is standing on a rolling stone.”

29. Muffler. Apparently here—a bandage over the eyes. In M. W. iv. 2. 73, 81, 205, it means “a wrapper worn by women and covering the face” (Schmidt).

37. A pax. Altered to “pix” by Theo. Johnson says the two words mean the same, but this is not true. The pax, according to Nares, was “a symbol of peace, which, in the ceremony of the mass, was given to be kissed at the time of the offering.” In Capt. Stevens’s Spanish Dict., we are told that it was the cover of the sacred chalice. The pix was the box or shrine in which the consecrated wafers were kept; and the word is still used in the same sense. Cf. Longfellow, Nuremberg: “In the church of sainted Lawrence stands a pix of sculpture rare,” and see the author’s note on the line. Steevens quotes Stow’s Chronicle: “palmes, chalices, crosses, vestments, pixes, paxes, and such like.” In the preent passage, S. follows Holinshed, who says (see p. 138 above) that “a soulidour tooke a pix out of a church,” etc.; but, as the two words were often confounded, it does not seem worth while to change the folio reading.

54. Figo. The Spanish word for fig: often used as a term of contempt. For a full discussion of the origin and various meanings thereof, see Douce’s Illustrations of Shakespeare. In The fig of Spain just below, Steevens sees an allusion to the use of poisoned figs, and quotes several passages in support of that explanation; as from Shirley, The Brothers, 1652: “I must poison him; one fig sends him to Erebos;” Ben Jonson, Every Man in His Humour: “The lye to a man of my coat is as ominous a fruit as the fico,” etc. But the phrase here is probably a mere repetition of the contemptuous figo.

56. See in a summer’s day. Cf. M. N. D. i. 2. 75, and see note in our ed. p. 135.

67. Learn you. For the expletive use of the pronoun, see Gr. 220.

68. Sconce. Bulwark. In C. of E. ii. 2. 37, it is applied in jest to a covering for the head (Schmidt).

A beard of the general’s cut. Certain professions and classes seem to have been distinguished by the cut of the beard. Thus we read of the bishop’s beard, the judge’s, the soldier’s, the citizen’s, etc. St. quotes Greene, Quip for an Upstart Courtier, 1592: “he [the barber] descends as low as his beard, and asketh whether he please to be shaven or no? whether he will have his peak cut short and sharp, amiable, like an inamorato, or broade pendent, like a spade, to be terrible, like a warrior and soldado?”

75. For ou=of, see Gr. 182; and for mistook, just below, Gr. 343.

81. From the pride. That is, about the bridge.

86. Passages. Acts, occurrences. Cf. T. N. iii. 2. 77: “such impossible passages of grossness;” Cymb. iii. 4. 94:

>“It is no act of common passage, but
>A strain of rareness,” etc.

96. Bubukles. “A corrupt word, formed half of carbuncle, half of bubo, probably meaning a red pimple” (Schmidt). Steevens quotes Chaucer, C. T. 623:

>“A Somnour was ther with us in that place,
>That hadde a frye-red [fire-red] cherubynes face.
>
>Ther nas quyksilver, litarowe, ne bremstone,
>Boras, ceruce, ne oille of tartre noon,
>Ne ovnment that wold clene and byte,
>That him might helpen of his white,
>Ne of the knobbes sittyng on his chekes.”

101. We give express charge, etc. See Holinshed, p. 138 above.

104. Leunity. The folio has “Leuitie;” an obvious misprint.

107. Habite. The herald’s coat. The person of a herald being inviolable, he was distinguished by a peculiar dress.

108. Of thee. From thee. Gr. 166.
ACT III. SCENE VII. 169

112. Though we seemed dead, etc. Malone quotes M. for M. ii. 2. 90: “The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept.” Advantage = favourable opportunity.

118. Proportion. Be in proportion to, correspond to. Digested = put up with.

120. In weight to re-answer. Fully to make amends for. Cf. M. for M. i. 2. 125: “Make us pay down for our offence by weight.”

135. Of craft and vantage. That is, who is cunning, and is besides favoured by circumstances (Schmidt).

142. This your air. This is to be added to the examples given in Macb. p. 179, note on That their fitness. See Gr. 239.

147. God before. See on i. 2. 307 above.

149. There’s for thy labour, etc. Cf. Holinshed, p. 138 above. It was customary to reward a herald, whatever might be the character of his message.

158. Deliver so. Say so. Cf. Temp. ii. r. 45: “as he most learnedly delivered,” etc.

SCENE VII.—1. The stage-direction of the folio here is, “Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Ramburs, Orleance, Dolphin, with others.” The quarto has “Enter Burbon, Constable, Orleance, Gelbon;”* and it gives to Bourbon the speeches assigned by the folio to the Dauphin, or “Dolphin.” It is evident from iii. 5. 62 fol. that the Dauphin was not at the battle; and it has been suggested by Mr. Johnes that either the name of Sir Guichard Dauphin (cf. iv. 8. 91) led S. into the error, or the editors have confounded two persons meant by the poet to be distinct. It is curious that here (as in the substitution of Bourbon for Britaine in iii. 5, and some other instances pointed out by Mr. P. A. Daniel in his ed. of Henry V. published by the New Shakspere Society, 1877), the editor of the quarto appears to have corrected an historical error in the play.

13. As if his entrails were hairs. That is, as if he were a tennis-ball, stuffed with hair. Cf. Much Afo, iii. 2. 47: “the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis-balls.”

17. Hermes. The only instance in which S. calls Mercury by his Greek name. Cf. ii. prol. 7, etc.

20. The dull elements, etc. Alluding to the old notion that all things

* Gelbon does not resemble any French name mentioned by the Chronicles in this connection. Possibly, as Mr. Daniel suggests, it was the name of the actor who played the part.
were composed of the four elements, earth, air, fire, and water. See J. C. p. 185, note on His life was gentle, etc. Cf. also T. N. ii. 3. 10: "Does not our life consist of the four elements?" A. and C. v. 2. 292:

"I am fire and air; my other elements
I give to baser life."

Fire and air were supposed to preponderate in the higher forms of life, as earth and water in the lower.

24. Jades. Warb. wished to transpose jades and beasts, on the ground that the former, not the latter, was the term of reproach. K. remarks that jade was not always contemptuous, and quotes Ford:

"Like high-bred jades upon a tilting day
In antique trappings."

But the word always has a depreciatory meaning in S., and we see no difficulty in explaining it so here.

24. Absolute. Faultless, perfect. Cf. M. for M. v. 1. 54: "as grave, as just, as absolute As Angelo;" Ham. v. 2. i. i. "an absolute gentleman," etc. W. remarks: "We have lost a very good word in losing absolute with its Elizabethan signification, if indeed it be hopelessly gone. It meant something more than perfect, or even unexceptionable, and was sometimes used to convey the idea that the thing of which it was predicated had standard or authoritative merit."

32. Argument. Subject. Cf. i Hen. IV. ii. 1. 100: "it would be argument for a week," etc.

35. Familiar to us, etc. That is, whether familiar to us or unknown; the whole world. The Camb. and Globe eds. print "the world, familiar to us and unknown to lay apart," etc., which is to us unintelligible.

42. Prescript. Normal; or, perhaps, prescriptive, immemorial.

45. Shrewdly. "In a high and mischievous degree (quite = the German adverb arg)” (Schmidt). Cf. 136 below; also A. W. iii. 5. 91, Ham. i. 4. 1, etc.

47. Wears his own hair. Alluding to the custom of wearing false hair, to which S. seems to have had a special aversion. See Mer. p. 149.

51. Le chien, etc. See 2 Pet. ii. 22.

61. A many. Now obsolete, though we still say a few and many a in a distributive sense. Cf. iv. 1. 117 below; also M. of V. iii. 5. 73, Rich. III. iii. 7. 184, etc. Tennyson uses the expression in The Miller's Daughter: "They have not shed a many tears." Gr. 87.

71. Who will go to hazard, etc. Cf. iv. prol. 18 below.

97. But his lackey. That is, he has beaten nobody but his footboy (Johnson).

'Tis a hooded valour, etc. An allusion to the practice of keeping hawks hooded until they were to fly at the game. To bait was to flap the wings, as the bird did when unhooded. Here there is a pun on bait in this sense and bate = abate, diminish.

100. Cap. "Alluding to the practice of capping verses" (Johnson).

104. Well placed. Well put, well said.

105. Have at, etc. Cf. C. of E. iii. 1. 51: "Have at you with a proverb:" R. and J. iv. 5. 125: "have at you with my wit," etc. See also Hen. VIII. p. 174, note on I'll venture one have-at-him.
ACT IV. PROLOGUE.

108. A fool's bolt. A bolt was a blunt-headed arrow.

118. Peevish. Silly, childish; its ordinary if not its only meaning in S. Cf. Rich. III. i. 3. 194, iii. i. 31, iv. 2. 100, etc. Steevens (in his note on Cymb. i. 6. 54) gives many examples of this sense from other old writers. Schmidt does not recognize the modern meaning in his Lexicon; Wb., strangely enough, makes no reference to this obsolete one.

121. Apprehension. Capacity to apprehend, perception, intelligence. Cf. Ham. ii. 2. 319: "in apprehension how like a God!"

132. Robustious. Stout, sturdy. Cf. Ham. iii. 2. 10: "a robustious periwig-pated fellow." Robust does not occur in S.

133. Give them, etc. Boswell quotes Otway, Venice Preserved:

"Give but an Englishman . . .
Beef, and a sea-coal fire, he's yours for ever."

---

PROLOGUE.—2. Poring. "That is, straining its eyes and yet seeing only the nearest things, purblind" (Schmidt).

3. Fills. For the form, see Gr. 336.

5. Stilly. Softly. Used nowhere else by S. Cf. M. N. D. iv. 1. 80 (stage-direction), and see note in our ed. p. 174. St. quotes from an account of the baptism of Prince Frederick Henry, 1594: "After which ensued a still noyse of recorders and flutes."

6. That. So that. Gr. 283. According to Holinshed, the armies were only two hundred and fifty paces from each other.

9. Battle. Army; as in iv. 2. 54 below. Cf. K. John, iv. ii. 78: "two dreadful battles set," etc. In iv. 3. 69 below, battles = battalions; as in J. C. v. 1. 4, etc.
NOTES.

Umber'd. Schmidt explains this as "embrowned, darkened;" but it seems better to understand it as referring to the effect of the fire-light on their faces. Malone remarks that umber, "mixed with water, produces such a dusky yellow colour as the gleam of fire by night gives to the countenance." Taken in this sense, it is an exceedingly picturesque word.

11. The night's dull ear. Steevens quotes Milton, L’All. 42: "And singing startle the dull night."

12. Accomplishing. Furnishing, making complete. According to Douce, closing rivets up refers to fastening the bottom of the casque to the top of the cuirass, which was done after both had been put on.

16. Name. The folio has "nam'd," which was corrected by Tyrwhitt. 18, 19. Cf. Holinshed's statement that "the soldiers the night before had plaid the Englishmen at dice" (p. 139 above).

Over-lusty = "too lively and merry" (Schmidt). Cf. Lear, ii. 4. 10: "over-lusty at legs."

20. Cripple tardy-gaited. The folio gives it "creep-tardy-gated."

26. Investing. Attending (Schmidt). Warb. would read "invest in," that is, clothed in; and Heath, "in fasting."

27. Presenteth. Steevens's emendation of the "Presented" of the folio.

28. Who. The relative, the interrogative, referring to him in 31.

Gr. 251.

35. No note. Nothing to indicate. Cf. Much Ado, iii. 2. 54: "The greatest note of it is his melancholy," etc.

38. All-watch'd. "Watched throughout" (Schmidt), spent in watching. Gr. 374.

39. Freshly looks. Cf. A. Y. L. iii. 2. 243: "Looks he as freshly," etc. Overbears all=represents the anxiety that wears upon him. It explains it, "overcomes all disposition on the part of the soldiers to blame or reproach him for the plight he is in;" but this does not agree so well with the context. The king puts on a cheerful look himself, and thus revives the drooping spirits of his soldiers. Cf. Virgil, Æn. i. 208:

"Talia voce refer, curisque ingentiis aeger, Spem vultu simulat, premit altum corde dolorem."

41. That. So that. See on 6 above.

43. A largess, etc. Holt White quotes Quinctilian, Inst. i. 2: "Non enim vox illa preceptoris, ut coena, minus pluribus sufficit; sed ut sol, universis idem lucis calorisque largitur."

45. Then, mean and gentle all, etc. The folio has "Thawing cold feare, that meane and gentle all

Behold, as may vnworthinesse define.
A little touch of Harry in the Night,
And so our Scene," etc.

We have adopted (with D. and others) the emendation of Theo., who says: "As this stood, it was a most perplex'd and nonsensical passage; and could not be intelligible but as I have corrected it. The poet first expatiates on the real influence that Harry's eye had on his camp; and then addressing himself to every degree of his audience, he tells them,
ACT IV. SCENE I.

he'll shew (as well as his unworthy pen and powers can describe it) a little touch or sketch of this hero in the night; a faint resemblance of that cheerfulness and resolution which this brave prince expressed in himself and inspired in his followers." K., W., and the Camb. editors retain the folio reading, with some changes in pointing. They understand mean and gentle to refer to the various ranks of the English army. That must then be =so that; and as may unworthiness define would appear to mean, so far as inferior natures can appreciate it. Perhaps, as Delius conjectures, a line is lost after 45.

51. Foils. Swords used in fencing; here = fencers, or swordsmen.
54. Minding. Calling to mind, thinking of.

SCENE I.—7. Husbandry. Thrift, economy. Cf. T. and C. i. 2. 7:

"And, like as there were husbandry in war,
Before the sun rose he was harness'd light."

10. Dress us. Prepare ourselves. Cf. 1 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 51: "And dress'd myself in such humility," etc. Some eds. print it "dress," as if a contraction of address; but the original meaning of dress is to put in order, prepare. See Wb.

16. Likes me. Pleases me, suits me. See on iii. prol. 32; and cf. iv. 3. 77.

23. Casted. Cast off. Cf. T. N. ii. 5. 161: "cast thy humble slough." S. elsewhere uses cast for the participle; as in A. Y. L. iii. 4. 16, etc. Slough = the skin of a snake; as in the passage from T. N. just quoted. See also 2 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 229. Legerity = lightness, alacrity; used by S. only here.

27. Desire. Invite. Cf. T. of C. iv. 5. 150:

"I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents."

28, 29. For the measure, see Gr. 513.
32. I would. On would = wish, see Gr. 329.
34. God-a-mercy. A corruption of "God have mercy;" here, as often = gramercy, thank you (Schmidt). Cf. K. John, i. 1. 185; Ham. ii. 2. 172, etc.
38. Popular. Of the people, plebeian. Cf. Cor. ii. 1. 230, ii. 3. 109, iii. 1. 106, etc.
39. Gentleman. On the measure here and in 42, see Gr. 465.
40. Trailest thou, etc. Farmer quotes Chapman, Revenge for Honour: "Fit for the trayler of the puissant pike."

44. Bawcock. See on iii. 2. 22.

45. Imp. Youngling. Used only by Armado, Holofernes, and Pistol. Cf. L. L. L. i. 2. 5. v. 2. 592, and 2 Hen. IV. v. 5. 46. Steevens quotes Holinshed: "his sonne prince Edward, that goodlie imphe."

On the measure of the line, see Gr. 505.
NOTES.

60. The figo. See on iii. 6. 54 above.

65. Lower. The quarto of 1600 has "fewer," changed to "lower" in that of 1608; the folio has "fewer," which Steevens was inclined to favour as a provincialism = lower. He adds: "In Sussex I heard one female servant say to another: Speak fewer, or my mistress will hear you."

85. I think it be. Cf. C. of E. v. i. 379: "I think it be, sir," etc. Gr. 299.

91. Thomas. The folio has "John."

105. Be. See Gr. 300.

106. Possess him, etc. Cf. 275 below: "Possess them not with fear;"

1 Hen. IV. ii. 2. 112: "possessed with fear," etc.

110. As cold a night as it is. See Gr. 276.

68: "Shall I speak my conscience?"

117. A many. See on iii. 7. 61; and cf. iv. 3. 95 below.

118. To wish him. As to wish him. Gr. 281.

131. Latter. Last; as often. Cf. 1 Hen. IV. v. i. 92; 1 Hen. VI. ii. 5. 38; A. and C. iv. 6. 39, etc.

28; Macb. i. 7. 39, etc.

136. When blood is their argument. When engaged in "bloody business" (Macb. ii. 1. 48, Oth. iii. 3. 469). See on iii. 1. 21 above.

138. Who to disobey. See Gr. 274.

139. All proportion of subjection. All "reasonable service."

141. Miscarry upon the sea. Be lost at sea. Cf. M. for M. iii. 1. 217: "who miscarried at sea;" M. of V. ii. 8. 29: "there miscarried a vessel of our country," etc.

151. Never so. See Gr. 52. 406.

1: "To do no contrived murder."

158. Native. In their own country. Cf. iv. 3. 96 below: "native graves."

166. The which. See Gr. 270.

169. Dying so. For the participle, see Gr. 378.

175. Man. For the "confusion of construction," see Gr. 417.

188. Go about. Attempt, undertake. Cf. M. N. D. iv. 1. 212; Much Ado, i. 3. 12, iv. 1. 65, iv. 2. 28, etc.
191. Round. Plain-spoken, blunt. Cf. T. N. ii. 3. 102: “I must be round with you;” Lear, i. 4. 58: “he answered me in the roundest manner,” etc.
203. Take thee a box on the ear. Cf. iv. 7. 118 below; also M. for M. ii. 1. 189, T. of S. iii. 2. 165, T. N. ii. 5. 75, etc.
211. French crowns. A French crown was a common expression for a bald head (cf. M. for M. i. 2. 52; M. N. D. i. 2. 99; A. W. ii. 2. 23, etc.); but the pun here, as Tyrwhitt remarks, may turn simply on the double meaning of crown. To cut French crowns is an allusion to the crime of clipping coin.
230. Thy soul of adoration. The soul of thy adoration, the essential nature which men adore in thee. The folio reads: “What? is thy soul of adoration?” Johnson wished to read, “What is thy soul, O adoration?”—that is, “O reverence paid to kings, what art thou within? What are thy real qualities? What is thy intrinsic value?” Malone reads, “What is the soul,” etc.
248. The farced title, etc. “The extended or swollen title prefixed to the king, as for example His Most Gracious Majesty, the king” (J. H.). For fore, see on ii. 2. 1 above.
255. Distressful. Earned by painful labour.
260. Helps Hyperion to his horse. Is up before the sun.
265. Had the forehand, etc. Would have the advantage of a king.
269. The peasant best advantages. Most benefit the peasant. For the verb, cf. Temp. i. 1. 34: “our own doth little advantage.” See also V. and A. 950; F. C. iii. 1. 242, etc. For the form, see Gr. 412, and cf. 333.
276. If. The folio has “of;” the emendation is Tyrwhitt’s. Theo, had suggested “lest.” K. and Sr. point the passage thus:

“Take from them now
The sense of reckoning of the opposed numbers!
Pluck their hearts from them not to-day, O Lord,
O not to-day! Think not upon the fault,” etc.

The Camb. editors suggest that a line may have been lost, which with the help of the quarto they supply as follows:

“Take from them now
The sense of reckoning of the opposed numbers.
Lest that the multitudes which stand before them
Pluck their hearts from them.”
NOTES.

279. Compassing. Obtaining. C£ T. G. of V. ii. 4. 214: “to compass her I’ll use my skill,” etc.

286. Chantries. “One of these monasteries was for Carthusian monks, and was called Bethlehem; the other was for religious men and women of the order of Saint Bridget, and was named Sion. They were on opposite sides of the Thames, and adjoined the royal manor of Sheen, now called Richmond” (Malone).

288-290. Johnson explains the passage thus: “I do all this, says the King, though all that I can do is nothing worth, is so far from an adequate expiation of the crime, that penitence comes after all, implored pardon both for the crime and the expiation.” Heath’s explanation is perhaps to be preferred: “I am sensible that everything of this kind (works of piety and charity) which I have done or can do, will avail nothing towards the remission of this sin; since I well know that, after all this is done, true repentance, and implored pardon, are previously and indispensably necessary towards my obtaining it.”

SCENE II.—4. Via, etc. Begone “the dull elements of earth and water!” Cf. iii. 7. 20 above, and see note on the passage.

5. Rien puis? Pair, etc. “Can you add nothing more? Is he not air and fire?” Yes, says the Dauphin, and even heaven itself” (Malone).

11. Dout. Do out, put out. Cf. Ham. iv. 7. 192: “this folly douts,” etc. The folio in both passages has “doubt,” which W. retains here, making it to make to doubt, to terrify; a sense not found elsewhere in S.

“and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour i’ the morn.”

17. Suck away their souls. Steevens quotes Dryden, Don Sebastian: “Sucking each other’s souls while we expire,” and Pope, Eloisa to Abelard: “Suck my last breath, and catch my flying soul.”

29. Hilding. Properly a noun =a base menial. Cf. T. of S. ii. 1. 26:

“For shame, thou hilding,” etc. It is used again as an adjective in 2 Hen. IV. i. 1. 57: “He was some hilding fellow.”

31. idle speculation. Inactive looking-on.

32. What’s to say? Cf. T. N. iii. 3. 18: “What’s to do?” Gr. 359.

35. Tucket sonance. A tucket was a flourish on a trumpet. Steevens quotes The Spanish Tragedy: “a tucket afar off.” Sonance = sound. Cf. Heywood, Rape of Lucrece, 1630: “to hear their sonance.”

36. Dare the field. “He uses terms of the field as if they were going out only to the chase for sport. To dare the field is a phrase in falconry. Birds are dared when by the falcon in the air they are terrified from rising, so that they will be sometimes taken by the hand. Such an easy capture the lords expected to make of the English” (Johnson). Cf. Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 282: “dare us with his cap like larks.”
ACT IV. SCENE III.

41. Their ragged curtains. Their tattered banners.

44. Beaver. The visor of a helmet. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. iv. 1. 120: “their beavers down;” Ham. i. 2. 230: “he wore his beaver up.”

45. Like fixed candlesticks. “Grandpré alludes to the form of ancient candlesticks, which frequently represented human figures holding the sockets for the lights in their extended hands” (Steevens). Cf. Vittoria Corombona, 1612: “he showed like a pewter candlestick, fashioned like a man in armour, holding a tilting staff in his hand little bigger than a candle.”

47. Lob down. Hang down, droop.

51. Gimbal bit. A bit made of rings or links. Steevens cites King Edward III. i. 2: “Nor lay aside their jacks of gymold mail.” Gimmealed mail was armour composed of links like those of a chain. Malone quotes Minsheu, Dict., 1619: “A gimmal or gemmow from the Gal. gemeau, Lat. gemellus, double, or twinnies, because they be rings with two or more links.”

60. Guidon. The folio has “guard ; on,” etc. The emendation is found in Rann’s ed, and is adopted by the Camb. editors, K., and others. It is favoured by what follows; but the folio reading is defended by Malone, who considers that “guard means here nothing more than the men of war whose duty it was to attend on the Constable of France, and among those his standard, that is, his standard-bearer.”

62. For. Because of. Gr. 150.

63. Outwear. Are wearing away, wasting. Cf. V. and A. 841: “Her song was tedious and outwore the night;” L. L. L. ii. 1. 23: “Till paimful study shall outwear three years,” etc. S. uses the word only of the lapse of time.

SCENE III.—2. Is rode. See Gr. 295, 343.

9. For the measure, see Gr. 469.

15. As full of valour, etc. Cf. Rich. II. v. 5. 114: “As full of valour as of royal blood.”

16. O that we now, etc. Cf. extract from Holinshed, p. 139 above.

18. What’s he, etc. Gr. 254. For the measure, see Gr. 500.

20. Know. The old plural of enough.

26. It yearns. It grieves. Cf. M. W. iii. 5. 45: “it would yearn your heart to see it.” We have had the word used intransitively in ii. 2. 3. 6 above.
NOTES.

35. That he, etc. For the "confusion of construction," see Gr. 415.
37. Convoy. Travelling expenses.
40. The feast of Crispian. The 25th of October, Saint Crispin's day.
Crispin and Crispian were brothers, born in Rome; whence they travelled to Soissons, France, about A.D. 303, to propagate the Christian religion. They supported themselves by working at their trade of shoemaking; but the governor of the town, learning that they were Christians, caused them to be beheaded. They subsequently became the tutelar saints of the shoemakers.
41. The folio reads: "He that shall see this day, and live old age."
The transposition was made by Pope, and is favoured by the quarto reading, "He that outlives this day and sees old age."
45. The vigil. The evening before the festival.
48. This line, omitted in the folio, is restored from the quarto.
50. With advantages. Advantage sometimes means interest upon money; as in M. of V. i. 3. 71, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 599. Here it is used metaphorically in the same sense; as in K. John, iii. 3. 22: "And with advantage means to pay thy love."
63. Gentle his condition. "Advance him to the rank of a gentleman"
(Johnson). On gentle, see Gr. 290.
68. Bestow yourself. "Repair to your post." (Schmidt).
70. Expedience. Expedition, haste. Cf. Rich. II. ii. 1. 287: "making hither with all due expediency." So expeditiously = quickly in A. Y. L. iii. i. 18: "Do this expeditiously," etc.
77. Likes me. Pleases me. See on iv. i. 16 above. Gr. 297.
83. Englutted. Swallowed up. Cf. Oth. i. 3. 57: "it engluts and swallows other sorrows;" T. of A. ii. 2. 175:

"How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night engulfed!"

84. On thee, see Gr. 414; and on wilt mind, Gr. 348. See also on 13 above.
86. Retire. See Gr. 451.
91. Achieve. "Finish, kill" (Schmidt). Some make it = capture, get possession of; as in M. of V. iii. 2. 210, etc.
94. With. See Gr. 193.
95. A many. See on iii. 7. 61 above.
104. Abounding. Theo. preferred to read "a bounding," which some eds. adopt.
107. Relapse. For the accent, see Gr. 492.
109. For the working-day. Cf. i. 2. 277 above.
114. Slovenry. Slovenliness; used by S. nowhere else.
117. Or they will pluck, etc. Though they have to pluck, etc.
130. Vaward. Vanguard. Cf. Cor. i. 6. 53: "Their bands by the va-ward,” etc. It is used metaphorically in M. N. D. iv. 110 and 2 Hen.
IV. i. 2. 199.

132. How. As. Gr. 46.

Scene IV.—4. Callino, etc. The folio has “Qualtitie calmie custure me.” Various emendations had been proposed before Boswell found an old Irish song called “Callino, castore me,” which, he suggests, Pistol probably hums contemptuously.

9. Fox. A cant word for sword. The figure of a fox was often engraved on blades. Steevens quotes B. and F., Philaster: “I made my father’s old fox fly about his ears;” and The Two Angry Women of Abington, 1599: “I had a sword, ay the flower of Smithfield for a sword; a right fox, I’ faith.”

15. Rim. Steevens remarks that some part of the intestines was anciently called the rim, and quotes Sir Arthur Gorges, Lucan, 1614:

> The slender rimme too weake to part
> The boyling liver from the heart.”

The word is also used by Holland in his Pliny, and by Chapman in his Iliad. Cole, in his Dict.,” 1678, describes it as the caul in which the bowels are wrapped.

19. Brass. As Sir W. Rawlinson notes, either S. had little knowledge of French or his fondness for punning led him here into an error; for the s in bras is silent. Johnson suggested that the pronunciation may have been different in the time of S., but Malone and Douce have proved that it was the same as now. Sir W. Davenant makes the word rhyme with draw; and Eliot, in his Orthoeopia Gallica, 1593, directs that bras de fer be pronounced “bra de fer.” K. thinks that though the Frenchman might have said bra, the sound might have suggested to Pistol the word which he had seen written bras; but this seems a little forced.

20. Luxurious. Lustful; as always in S. Cf. luxury in iii. 5. 6.

23. *Moys.*Apparently meant for money of some kind, and perhaps suggested by moidore, though Johnson is wrong in giving the derivation of that word as “mot d’or.” Douce says that moy was a measure of corn, but it is not likely that it has that meaning here.

24. Ask me. For the omission of the preposition, see Gr. 201.

29. Firk. Beat, drub (Schmidt). Ferret = worry, as a ferret does its game. Schmidt quotes the old play of King Leir: “I’ll ferret you ere night for that word.”

70. This roaring devil, etc. In the old “moralties” or comedies, the Vice or buffoon had a sword or dagger of lath with which he used to beat the devil, and sometimes attempted to pare his long nails. Cf. T. N. iv. ii. 134:

> “Like to the old Vice,
> Who, with dagger of lath,
> In his rage and his wrath,
> Cries, ah, ha! to the devil:
> Like a mad lad,
> Pare thy nails, dad,” etc.

73. Adventurously. Daringly, boldly.
NOTES.

SCENE V.—1. Here, as in iii. 7 above, the quarto omits the Dauphin from the list of speakers. The stage-direction is simply “Enter the four French Lords”—that is, “Burbant, Constable, Orlance, and Gebon” (see on iii. 7. 1).

8. Be. Often so used in questions. Gr. 299.

11. Let us die in honour. The folio has “Let vs dye in once more backe againe.” K. suggested the reading in the text. The quarto has “Lets dye with honour, our shame doth last too long.”

15. On heaps. Cf. v. 2. 39 below; also T. and C. iii. 2. 29, F. C. i. 3. 23, etc.

116: “lards the lean earth,” etc. The Coll. M. S. substitutes “loading.”

12. Insteep’d. See Gr. 440.

18. Well-foughten. See Gr. 344.

21. Raught. The old imperfect of reach, and the only one in S. Cf. L. L. L. iv. 2. 41; 3 Hen. VI. i. 4. 68, etc. We have the participle raught in 2 Hen. VI. ii. 3. 43 and A. and C. iv. 9. 30; but reached in Oth. i. 2. 24.

22. Dear my lord. See Gr. 13.

24. So. Then. See Gr. 66.

33. Perforce. Necessarily; in this sense always joined with must. Cf. M. N. D. iii. 2. 90, etc.

34. Mistful. The folio has “mixtful;” the emendation is due to Warb. Some eds. read “wistful.”

35. The alarum was sounded by affrighted fugitives from the English camp, who declared that the French were making an attack in the rear. Henry, not knowing the extent of the danger, gave the order for killing the prisoners (Malone).

SCENE VII.—1. Kill the poys, etc. The English baggage was guarded only by boys and lackeys, and some French runaways, learning this fact, attacked them and plundered the baggage. It is this villainy to which Fluellen alludes.

8. The king most worthily, etc. Johnson points out that the king gives one reason for killing the prisoners (iv. 6. 36), and Gower another; but S. follows Holinshed, who gives both these reasons for Henry’s conduct.

49. I was not angry. For the tense, see Gr. 347.

55. Skirr. “Move rapidly, scour” (Schmidt). Cf. Macb. v. 3. 35: “skirr the country round.”

56. Enforced. Thrown with force. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. iv. 1. 71, etc.

64. Fin’d. Fixed as the sum to be paid (Schmidt).

folio has “book” in the present passage; the emendation is from the Coll. MS. K. and St. retain “book.”

69. Woe the while. Cf. W. T. iii. 2. 173, and F. C. i. 3. 83.

74. Yerk. Jerk, thrust. Cf. Oth. i. 2. 5: “to have yerk’d him here under the ribs.”

79. A many. See on iii. 7. 61.

92. In a garden, etc. King Arthur won a great victory over the Saxons “in a garden where leeks did grow,” and Saint David ordered that every one of the king’s soldiers should wear a leek in his cap in honour thereof. Hence the Welsh custom of wearing the emblem on St. David’s day, March 1st.

93. Monmouth caps. Fuller, in his Worthies of Wales, says: “The best caps were formerly made at Monmouth, where the Capper’s chapel doth still remain.” Reed quotes the old ballad of The Caps: “The soldiers that the Monmouth wear,” etc.

108. Our heralds go, etc. For the construction of go, see Gr. 364.

116. Swaggered with me. Bullied me. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 107: “he’ll not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance.” On who, see Gr. 249.

Quite from the answer, etc. “Quite debarred by the laws of the duello from answering the challenge of one of such inferior rank” (J. H.). On from = away from, cf. F. C. ii. 1. 196: “Quite from the main opinion,” etc. Gr. 158. There is a play upon this sense of from in Rich. III. iv. 4. 258: “That thou dost love my daughter from thy soul,” etc.

130. Jack-sauce. Fluellen’s blunder for Saucy Jack. For Jack as a term of contempt, cf. 1 Hen. IV. iii. 3. 99, v. 4. 143; R. and F. ii. 4. 160; M. of V. iii. 4. 77, etc.

144. When Alençon and myself, etc. This alludes to an historical fact. Henry was felled to the ground by the Duke of Alençon, but recovered himself and slew two of the Duke’s attendants.

165. If that. See Gr. 287 (cf. v. prol. 17 below); and for as, Gr. 311.

169. Touch’d. See Gr. 377.

170. Will return. For the ellipsis of the nominative, see Gr. 399.

Scene VIII.—7. ’Sblood. A common oath, abbreviated from God’s blood; usually omitted or replaced by other words in the folio (Schmidt).

20. In a summer’s day. See on iii. 6. 61 above.

64. I will none, etc. See Gr. 53.

70. Sort. Rank. See on iv. 7. 126 above.

84. Mercenaries. Hired soldiers, common soldiers.
NOTES.

100. Davy Gam, esquire. This gentleman, being sent by Henry, before the battle, to find out the strength of the enemy, made this report: "May it please you, my liege, there are enough to be killed, enough to be taken prisoners, and enough to run away." He saved the king's life in the field (Malone).

101. Of name. Of eminence. Cf. Rich. II. ii. 3. 56: "None else of name and noble estimate."

106. So great and little loss, etc. Cf. Macb. i. 3. 60:

"Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear, Your favours nor your hate;"

and see note in our ed. p. 162.

109. Go we. Cf. 118 below: "Do we all holy rites," etc. Gr. 364.

121. We 'll. The quarto reading, adopted by Capell, D., and others; the folio has "And."

ACT V

3. Them. For the "redundant object," see Gr. 414.

7. For the measure, see Gr. 480.

10. Pales in. Encloses, encompasses. Cf. Cymb. iii. i. 19:

"As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in With rocks unscalable and roaring waters."

12. Whiffler. "An officer who walks first in processions, or before persons in high stations, on occasions of ceremony" (Hanmer). In the play of Clyomon, 1599, a whiffler makes his appearance at a tournament, clearing the way before the king. Cf. The Isle of Gulls, 1606: "And Manasses shall go before like a whiffler, and make way with his horns."

17. Where that, etc. Where his lords wish him to have his bruised helmet, etc., borne before him. See Holinshed, p. 141 above.

21. Giving full trophy, etc. "Transferring all the honours of conquest, all trophies, tokens, and shows, from himself to God" (Johnson). For quite from, see on iv. 7. 126 above.

ACT V. SCENES I. AND II.

26. Antique. Spelt antick or antique in the old eds. without regard to the meaning, but always accented on the first syllable. Gr. 492.

34. Much more cause. With may be understood, or "and there was much more cause" may be a parenthesis (Gr. 202).

38. The emperor. The folio has "emperor's;" the emendation is M. Mason's. The reference is to the emperor Sigismond, who was married to Henry's second cousin.

18. Parca's fatal web. The Parca were the Fates.

27. As eat it. For the ellipsis, see Gr. 353.

35. Astonished. Johnson and Steevens explain this as = stunned (with the blow); M. Mason and Schmidt as = confounded, amazed. K. says that the word is still a pugilistic term = stunned.

66. Gleeking. Scoffing, sneering. Cf. M. N. D. iii. 1. 150: "I can gleek upon occasion." Galling, which has much the same meaning, is not elsewhere used intransitively by S.

70. Condition. Temper, disposition. Cf. M. of V. i. 2. 143: "the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil," etc.

72. Huswifre. The usual spelling of housewife in the folio (Schmidt). The word is here used contemptuously = hussy. Cf. A. and C. iv. 15. 44: "the false housewife Fortune."

77. Cudgel'd. The folio, which prints the passage as prose, has "Cudgel" and "Ile turne." The quarto reads, "Bawd will I turne, and vse the slyte of hand," etc. Coll. and the Camb. ed. have "cudgelled" and "I'll turn;" W. has "cudgel'd" and "I'll;" D., K., H., and others give the reading we have adopted.

81. Johnson remarks here: "The comick scenes of The History of Henry the Fourth and Fifth are now at an end, and all the comick personages are now dismissed. Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly are dead; Nym and Bardolph are hanged; Gadshill was lost immediately after the robbery; Poins and Peto have vanished since, one knows not how; and Pistol is now beaten into obscurity. I believe every reader regrets their departure."

SCENE II.—1. Wherefore. For which.

17. The fatal balls. The eyes of the basilisk were fabled to kill with a glance. Cf. W. T. i. 2. 388: “Make me not sighted like the basilisk;”
NOTES.

Rich. III. i. 2. 151:

“Gloster. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Anne. Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead!”

See also Cymb. ii. 4. 107, etc. J. H. remarks: “Balls is here used in word-play, implying comparison between eye-balls and cannon-balls.”
19. Hove. For the “confusion of proximity,” see Gr. 412.
27. Bar. Barrier, place of congress (Johnson). On a previous occasion, Henry with his friends had had a conference with Katherine and her relatives in a field near Melun, where two pavilions were erected for the royal families, and a third between them for the interview. The Frenchmen, according to the Chronicle, “ditched, trenched, and paled their lodgings for fear of after-clappes; but the Englishmen had their parte of the field only barred and parted.” Malone suggests that S. may here have had this former meeting in his thoughts. The present conference took place in St. Peter’s Church at Troyes, but the editors agree in supposing it to occur in a palace; because, as Malone tells us, “St.
Peter’s Church would not admit of the French king and queen, etc., retiring, and then appearing again on the scene.” See p. 142 above.
33. Rub. Hinderance. See on ii. 2. 188.
34. Why that. See Gr. 287; and cf. 46 below.
39. On heaps. See on iv. 5. 13 above.
1. 244: “it own life,” etc. See Gr. 228, or Temp. p. 120.
42. Even-pleach’d. “Interwoven so as to have a smooth and even surface” (Schmidt). Cf. Much Ado, i. 2. 10: “a thick-pleach’d alley;”
1. iii. 1. 7: “the pleached bower,” etc.
45. Fumitory. The plant Fumaria (five species are found in England), called fumiter in Lear, iv. 4. 3. For doth in next line, see Gr. 334.
47. Deracinate. Uproot, extirpate. Cf. T. and C. i. 3. 99:

“rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture!”

Savagery here = wild growth; in K. John, iv. 3. 48, it means savage conduct, atrocity.
49. Freckled cowslip. Cf. M. N. D. ii. 1. 10:

“The cowslips t’ail her pensioners be:
In their gold coats spots you see;
Those be rubies, fairy favours,
In those freckles live their savours.”

The burnet is the Poterium sanguisorba. It was valued as a salad plant, and Bacon (Essay of Gardens, ed. 1625) says of it: “But those which Perfume the airc most delightfully, not passed by as the rest, but being Troden upon and Crushed, are Three: That is Burnet, Wilde-Time, and Water-Mints. Therefore, you are to set whole Allies of them, to have the Pleasure when you walk or tread.”
52. Kecksies. Properly the dried and withered stems of the hemlock, but the name is occasionally applied to the living plant.
51. Diffus’d. The folio has “defus’d;” as in Rich. III. i. 2. 78. Schmidt would retain that form, explaining it as = “shapeless.” Warb. defined diffus’d as “extravagant;” Johnson, as “wild, irregular, strange.”
53. Favour. Aspect, appearance. Cf. F. C. i. 2. 91, ii. 1. 76, etc.
77. Cursory. Cursory, hasty. The folio has “curselarie;” the quarto “cursenary.”
78. Pleaseth. May it please. Gr. 361.
79. Presently. Immediately; as in iii. 2. 49. Cf. Temp. i. 2. 125, iv. 1. 42, etc.
82. Pass our accept. Declare our acceptance. Malone conjectured “pass or accept” (=agree to, or take exception to), which is also in the Coll. MS.
84. Neither Clarence nor Huntington appear in the dramatis persona, as neither speaks a word. Huntington was John Holland, Earl of Hunt-ington, who afterwards married the widow of Edmond Mortimer, Earl of March (Malone).
90. Consign. Agree. Cf. 2 Hen. IV. v. 2. 143: “God consigning to my good intents,” etc.
92. Our gracious brother. See Gr. 13.
94. Too nicely urg’d. Too sophistically pressed.
131. You undid me. You would undo me.
133. In measure. That is, in dancing. There is a play on the different senses of the word; as in Much Ado, ii. 1. 74, L. L. L. iv. 3. 384, and Rich. II. iii. 4. 7.
137. Buffet. Box. Cf. K. John, ii. 1. 465:
Our ears are cudgel’d; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France.
138. Jack-an-apes. An ape or monkey. Cf. M. W. iv. 4. 67; A. W. iii. 5. 88, etc.
139. Greenly. Foolishly. Cf. Ham. iv. 5. 83: “we have done but greenly,” etc. See also iv. prol. 39: “But freshly looks.”
140. Nor have I no. See Gr. 406.
149. Plain and uncoined constancy. That is, like a plain piece of metal, that has not yet received any impression.
Perforce. See on iv. 6. 33 above.
154. Will fall. Will fall away, shrink.
176. Saint Denis. The patron saint of France. Cf. L. L. L. v. 2. 87: “Saint Denis to Saint Cupid!”
196. Scambling. Scrambling, struggling. Cf. i. 1. 4 above.
204. Très-chère et divin. The error in gender may be intentional; but some editors print "très-chère et divine," though they do not correct the preceding mon. The folio has "trescher & divin;" the passage is not found in the quartos.

210. Untempering. Not producing the desired effect, not moving or persuading. Cf. temper = fashion, mould; as in ii. 2. 118 above. See also T. A. iv. 4. 109.

228. Broken music. Mr. Chappell (Popular Music of the Olden Time, p. 246) explained this as "the music of a stringed band;" but, according to Mr. W. A. Wright (C. P. ed. of A. Y. L. p. 89), he has since altered his opinion, and now gives the following explanation: "Some instruments, such as viols, violins, flutes, etc., were formerly made in sets of four, which when played together formed a 'consort.' If one or more of the instruments of one set were substituted for the corresponding ones of another set, the result was no longer a 'consort,' but 'broken music.'" Cf. T. and C. iii. 1. 52 and A. Y. L. i. 2. 150, where, as here, there is a play upon the expression. See also Bacon, Essay 37: "accompanied with some broken Musick."

240. D'une votre indigne serviteur. The folio has "d'une nostre Seigneur indigne serviteur," which is nonsense. The Var. of 1821, following Pope, reads, "d'une votre indigne serviteur," which is adopted by K., W., H., and others; but we are not aware that there is any authority for the form serviteur. D. prints "serviteur." The Camb. editors give a reading of their own: "d'une de votre seigneurie indigne serviteur."

We may remark here, by the way, that we see no more reason for retaining the old French orthography in the text than the old English. We follow D. in giving the modern spelling.

255. List. Barrier, boundary. Cf. A. Y. L. ii. 1. 53; 1 Hen. IV. iv. 1. 51; Ham. iv. 5. 99, etc.

257. Find-faults. Fault-finders. For similar compounds, see Gr. 432.

269. Condition. Temper, disposition. See on v. 1. 70 above. Smooth = bland, gentle. Cf. 1 Hen. IV. i. 3. 7:

"my condition,
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down."

290. This moral. "That is, the application of this fable. The moral being the application of a fable, our author calls any application a moral" (Johnson). Cf. iii. 6. 35 above; also Much Ado, iii. 5. 78, M. N. D. v. 1. 120, T. of S. iv. 4. 79, etc.

297. Perspectively. As through a perspective; an optical contrivance, for which see Rich. II. ii. 2. 18, and note in our ed. p. 180.

299. Maiden walls, etc. Malone quotes R. of L. 468 and L. C. 176; to which might be added A. W. i. 1. 137.

309. According, etc. That is, in the exact form in which they were proposed.

315. Praecarissimus. It should be præcarissimus, as it is in the original treaty (printed in Rymer's Fædera); but S. copied the error (doubtless a typographical one) from Holinshead. The fact that the poet did not correct it confirms Ben Jonson's statement that he had "small Latin."
328. That never war, etc. So that war may never, etc. Gr. 368.
332. I kiss her. In accordance with the ancient ceremony of affiancing
(J. H.). Cf. T. N. v. i. 161: "Attested by the holy close of lips;"
K. John, ii. i. 534:

"King Philip. It likes us well; young princes, close your hands.
Austria. And your lips too," etc.

339. Paction. Agreement, alliance. The folio has "pation;" the emendation is due to Theo.

EPILOGUE.

1. All-unable. Weak, impotent. Cf. Lear, i. 1. 61: "speech unable," etc.

2. Bending. "Unequal to the weight of his subject and bending beneath it; or he may mean, as in Hamlet [iii. 2. 160], ‘Here stooping to your clemency’" (Steevess). Schmidt is also in doubt between these two explanations, of which we are inclined to prefer the former.

4. By starts. That is, by a fragmentary representation.

7. The world’s best garden. France. Cf. T. of S. i. 1. 4: "The pleasant garden of great Italy." Achiev’d=gained, won. Cf. iv. 3. 91 above.

11. The. The article "frequently precedes a verbal that is followed by an object." (Gr. 93).

14. Let this, etc. Let this play find acceptance.

ADDENDA.

Drawn (p. 154). Drawn=with drawn sword; as in Temp. ii. i. 308:
"Why are you drawn?" See also M. N. D. iii. 2. 402, K. and J. i. 1. 73, etc. Gr. 374.

Of sack (p. 158). Sack was "the generic name of Spanish and Canary wines" (Schmidt); but sometimes the particular kind was specified.
Cf. 2 Hen. IV. iv. 3. 104: "a good Sherris-sack;" that is, Sherry wine.
Nares quotes the ballad of Mad Tom: "a cup of Malaga sack;" and Herrick:

"thy isles shall lack Grapes, before Herrick leaves Canarie sack."

For the derivation of the word, see Wb.

The fatal balls (p. 183). It may be added that there is also a play upon the word basilisk, which sometimes meant a piece of heavy ordnance. Cf.
1 Hen. IV. ii. 3. 56: "Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin;" also Marlowe, Jew of Malta:

"Which with our bombards, shot, and basilisk,
We rent in sunder at our entry," etc.
King Henry. Give me any gage of thine (iv. 1. 196).
